WASHINGTON.

A Proposition in the House for the Reduction of the Army.

The Pacific Railroad Omnibus Bill Introduced in the Senate.

Further Debate on the Tenure-of-Office Bill.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Feb. 6.

The acrimonious debate in the House yesterday, in which Messrs. WINDOM and LOGAN taunted the Military Committee with a lack of earnestness in their desires to reduce the army, has produced a vigorous result. Mr. GARFIELD warmly and ably defended his Committee yesterday, and announced their readiness to bring in a bill for reduction at once to test the temper of these gentlemen, who are so anxious to reduce the army. The Military Committee met this morning, and, after a session of three hours, matured a very important bill, which will be offered as an amendment to the Army Appropriation bill on Monday under a suspension of the rules. Its main features are the reduction of the infantry branch of the army from 45 to 30 regiments, Secretary SCHOFIELD giving it as his opinion that the reduction of the cavalry and artillery could now be safely made. Another important feature is, that there shall be a consolidation of the ordnance and artillery into one corps, and a further consolidation of the Quartermaster, Commissary and Pay Departments into a Department of Supply—all other staff departments to be reduced in their organization. Various other minor details of reduction are proposed, buf these are the main features. The reduction is to be by process of absorption, and the total number of officers, staff and line, which will thus go out of service, will be over six hundred. The discussion on the Army bill has been very warm, and the bill which appropriates forty-three millions has fared badly at the hands of its friends in the Appropriations Committee.

THE PACIFIC RAILOAD BILL.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Senate Pacific Railroad Committee, reported to-day the Pacific Railroad bill, known as the Omnibus bill. The provisions of the measure were not all agreed to until this morning, and then the Committee stood six to five in favor of it as it now stands. Mr. HOWARD is reported to be in the minority, with Mr. WILSON and Mr. MORGAN. The latter, in open Senate, dissented from that provision in the bill guaranteeing the payment of interest on the bonds. There is very little doubt that the bill will be rejected when it comes before the Senate, although the lobbies in the interest of the various roads will make a determined effort to carry it through.

THE TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT.

Mr. EDMUNDS succeeded to-day in securing half an hour's consideration for the bill repealing the Tenure-of-Office act. Senator MORTON rather startled the Senate by some bold utterances on the subject. He said that he was in favor of its total repeal, and believed that its enactment at first was a mistake from which neither the Republican Party nor the country derived the slightest benefit. The idea, said he, of ever preventing a President from selecting his Cabinet was absurd. The House, it will be remembered, repealed it in toto. The Senate Committee so amended the House bill as to leave the law still in force, excepting only the Cabinet officers from its operation. Mr. EDMUNDS was in favor of this proposition, and also Mr. HOWE, who were the only other Senators who spoke on the subject to-day. It comes up again on Monday.

THE EAST RIVER BRIDGE.

A petition from the New-York Chamber of Commerce against any immediate legislation on the subject of the construction of the New-York East River bridge was presented in the Senate to-day by Mr. MORGAN. The petition sets forth that in the opinion of the Chamber a suspension bridge will interfere with navigation and commerce, and that a Select Committee has been appointed to investigate and report in two weeks. This action will probably prevent any legislation on the subject during the present session of Congress.

THE OVERLAND MAIL CONTRACT.

In the Wells-Fargo investigation, Mr. SPAIDES, Col. MARKLAND and three clerks in the Post Office Department, all of whom had been referred to by Mr. SCOTT SMITH, correspondent of various evening papers, as having furnished him with the information that the Committee would whitewash the matter, were examined, and each and all testified that they never furnished Mr. SMITH with any such information, and some of them said they had never exchanged a word with Mr. SMITH on the subject.

THE ALASKA INVESTIGATION.

The testimony of Mr. FREDERICK P. STANTON before the Committee investigating the alleged Alaska frauds having implicated Mr. PAINTER, a correspondent of a Philadelphia paper, that gentleman addressed a note to the New-York Post, in which he says:

"The statement as to the testimony of Mr. WALKER and Mr. STANTON, and my action in relation thereto, is false. Mr. WALKER swore that I had never spoken to him on any business in my life, and Mr. STANTON's allegation that I had applied to him for money for myself or any one else is contradicted point blank by me, under oath, and by his cross-examination. He admitted that he (STANTON) had always denied every thing any connection with the matter until it came out on the investigation. I never saw nor heard of MARTIN, except through newspaper statement, and I have never heard any one but your correspondent, who has a personal quarrel with me, allege that I had. Neither WALKER nor STANTON has so testified."

The Committee held another meeting to-day, when the Chairman presented the following communication:

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6, 1869.

Hon. C. T. Hulburd, Chairman Committee Public Expenditures:

SIR: Through the public newspapers, and from various individual sources, I learn that Mr. PAINTER has explicitly denied the facts stated by me in my testimony before your Committee. As no one was present at the several conversations detailed, except ourselves, I cannot directly establish the truth of my statement by any other witness, but I understand that Mr. ROBERT W. LATHAM is to be summoned before you, and as he knows certain facts which indirectly sustain my statements, I request you that you will examine him on the following points:

First—While the Alaska appropriation was pending in the House, Mr. PAINTER sent Mr. LATHAM to request that I should apply to Gov. WALKER to have him (PAINTER) employed and paid for advocating the measure.

Second—After the passage of the appropriation, and when Mr. PAINTER was threatening an investigation, Mr. LATHAM stated to me, in presence of Gov. WALKER, that PAINTER had said his conversations with me were confidential, and that if I revealed them he would attack me in the public papers and destroy my character.

Third—Mr. LATHAM also stated that Mr. PAINTER informed him that he (PAINTER) had in his possession, or had seen, an affidavit to the effect that Gov. WALKER had received various sums of money, amounting in all to $25,000 or $30,000, intended to be paid to Mr. PAINTER and other agents of the Press, which sums Gov. WALKER had dishonestly withheld from the parties to whom they were to be paid.

This money was alleged to have been paid on account of the Alaska purchase, and evidence of it, Mr. PAINTER said, had been found in Gov. WALKER's office.

Fourth—Mr. LATHAM known to what extent Mr. PAINTRE has admitted the truth of my statements made before the Committee, and to what extent he has denied them. In justice to myself, I demand that Mr. LATHAM shall be required to state what he knows on this subject. I am, very respectfully, &c.,

FREDERICK P. STANTON.

Mr. LATHAM testified that, as to the first conversation alleged to have taken place between these two gentlemen, he knew nothing. At Mr. PAINTER's request he had called on Mr. STANTON, and stated to him that the conversations between Mr. PAINTER and Mr. STANTON were confidential Mr. PAINTER and Mr. PAINTER expected him to regard them as Mr. PAINTER himself was cross-examined, and swore that the testimony of WALKER and STANTON, regarding him, was false. The only conversation he ever had with STANTON was, that meeting him one day, he asked him if he was in this Alaska business, to which Mr. STANTON replied he was not, and there the matter stopped. There is some terrible false swearing here somewhere. Even LATHAM, who is PAINTER's friend, is convicted by the latter's testimony of a false statement respecting his request of STANTON. Mr. PAINTER will be sworn once more to get the matter straight.

The foregoing is a correct statement of the public debt, as it appears from the books and Treasurer's return in the Department, on the 1st of February, 1869.

HUGH McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

By comparative statement of the public debt of Jan. 1, 1869, with that due on the 1st of February, it will be seen that there has been an increase of $14,700 in the debt bearing coin interest; the increase of the debt bearing currency interest is $1,545,000; decrease in the matured debt not presented for payment, $852,567; increase of the debt bearing no interest, $6,918,911 95; increase on Pacific Railroad bonds, $1,920,000—showing an increase of the total debt since Jan. 1 of $9,846,044 90.

The amount of coin in the Treasury decreased during the month $10,030,652 47; currency increased $437,824,054—showing an increase of the public debt over last month, less cash in the Treasury, $15,498,456 83.

TREASURY WARRANTS.

The warrants issued by the Treasury Department during the month of January, 1869, to meet the requirements of the Government, amounted in round numbers to the following sums, viz.:

Civil, miscellaneous and foreign intercourse	$44,449,000
Interest on public debt	30,704,000
War Department	6,824,000
Navy Department	1,259,000
Interior, Pensions and Indians	332,000

The warrants issued for the redemption of the public debt are not included in the above.

FRACTIONAL CURRENCY.

The receipts of fractional currency for the week ending to-day amount to $869,000.

Shipments for the week.

To the Assistant Treasurer at New-York	$200,000
To the Assistant Treasurer at St. Louis	100,000

Mutilated bills returned..... 11,553,233
Notes of insolvent banks redeemed..... 988,907
Actual circulation at this date..... 295,789,347
Fractional currency redeemed..... 638,618

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

The Reconstruction Committee at its meeting this morning agreed to report a bill removing legal and political disabilities from between 300 and 400 persons in the Southern States.

THE CASE OF MR. BRADLEY.

It will be remembered that several weeks since, the Supreme Court of the United States issued a peremptory mandamus to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to restore JOSEPH H. BRADLEY, Sr., to practice in that Court. The Court obeyed the mandamus under protest, yielding only to superior judicial authority, but at the same time passed an order in effect requiring some preliminaries to restore him to his full rights in all the Courts. To-day, Mr. BRADLEY, in the Supreme Court of the District, asked whether he would be allowed to be heard in the case which had just been called? Chief Justice CARTTER replied that he could be heard.

Mr. BRADLEY said he desired to know exactly where he stood, and he did not wish to appear by sufferance only.

Chief Justice CARTTER remarked that the decision made left him in statu quo, but he could proceed or not, as he chose.

Mr. BRADLEY said if he could not practice as other members of the bar, he would prefer not to practice at all.

Judge WYLIE remarked that under the decision, Mr. BRADLEY was expected to apologize to Judge FISHER, where the offence was committed.

Mr. BRADLEY replied he could not do it under any circumstances.

Judge OLIN coincided with Judge WYLIE.

Judge WYLIE said he would like to be informed exactly what Mr. BRADLEY intended to do.

Mr. BRADLEY replied that he could not, with justice to his clients, go into the case, and he would not nor could not, under the present circumstances between him and Judge FISHER, apologize to him, either in Court or out of Court, as he felt that he had been insulted by Judge FISHER, and before he would do it he would rot in jail.

The following order was then passed:

JOSEPH H. BRADLEY, Esq., having this day appeared in Court, and formally and in proper person announced his determination not to apply to the Criminal Court for restoration to the Bar from which he was dismissed by the order of that Court, made on the 16th day of AUGUST, 1867, and said order having been respected by this Court, it is therefore ordered that the rule adopted by the Court on the 26th day of January last, be applied to the case of said JOSEPH H. BRADLEY, and that he be allowed not to practice as an attorney or solicitor of this Court so long as said order of the Criminal Court shall remain in force.

FORTIETH CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Saturday, Feb. 6.

Mr. CONKLING presented a memorial of the Union League in relation to frauds in naturalization and elections. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Also, a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of New-York, asking Congress to suspend action upon the bill to provide for the construction of a bridge across East River, until the Committee appointed to investigate the matter shall have reported on it. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of the National Academy of Design, asking the passage of a copyright law. Also, a preamble and resolution of the New-York Chamber of Commerce, against secret sales of Government bonds and gold; and a memorial of the same body similar to that presented by Mr. CONKLING in relation to the bridge over East River. Referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MEDALS TO AMERICAN OFFICERS.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a joint resolution authorizing Commander CHARLES H. BALDWIN and Lieut. W. A. CLARK, of the United States Navy, to accept of a gold medal from the King of the Netherlands and a similar one authorizing Lieut. W. A. CLARK, of the Navy, to accept a gold medal from the Emperor of the French.

RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. HOWE introduced a bill to grant lands to the Superior and State Line Railroad. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE TENURE-OF-OFFICE BILL.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS the Senate took up the bill to repeal the Tenure-of-Office law. Mr. EDMUNDS said the bill as it had come from the House proposed to remove all legal restrictions from the President in the exercise of the power of appointment and removal. The Senate Judiciary Committee had not thought it wise to do that, and had therefore reported an amendment modifying the bill so as to permit the President to suspend a civil officer whenever in his judgment public good may require it, subject to the approval of the Senate, and without giving specific reasons for such suspension. The majority of the Committee, of which he was not one, had thought it fit that the heads of the Departments should be subject to removal at the will of the President alone, and had reported an amendment to that effect.

Mr. MORTON was in favor of the total repeal of the law. He believed it was a mistake in the beginning and did not believe the public services ever had been in any way benefited by it, but on the contrary felt satisfied that the law had been used to some extent to put thieves in office, and to throw upon the Senate the odium of putting and keeping them there. He liked the amendment proposed by the Committee so far as it allowed the President to choose the members of his Cabinet, and thought the idea of ever depriving a President of that power absurd; but the part of the amendment which would allow the President to suspend an officer during the session of Congress without giving reasons for such suspension, would make the bill worse than the law it proposed to repeal.

Mr. HOWE did not think it wise to except Cabinet officers from the general provisions of the law. He could not see any reason why a President should be allowed to dismiss a Cabinet officer at pleasure, when he would not also be at liberty to dismiss the head of the Internal Revenue Department, or any military, naval or judicial officer. He could not agree with the Senator from Indiana (Mr. MORTON) as to the effect of the Tenure-of-Office bill upon the public service, and he believed an honest President could just as readily dispose of a dishonest officer under that act as he could before its enactment.

Mr. THAYER expressed the hope that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. EDMUNDS) would press the bill upon the attention of the Senate every day until it should pass, and he was in favor of passing it in the form in which it had come from the House, unconditionally repealing the law. The discussion continued until the expiration of the morning hour.

THE SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the Constitutional Amendment.

Mr. DAVIS was entitled to the floor, but said he felt too unwell to speak, and yielded the floor to Mr. DOOLITTLE.

Mr. DOOLITTLE said: I look upon the proposition contained in this proposed amendment as one which goes to the foundation of our system of Government. Ours is a divided system. We have a State Government and a Federal Government, and the citizens owe allegiance to both. Neither of these Governments is endowed with absolute sovereignty; each is endowed with limited sovereignty. The States are sovereign, except so far as they have parted with their sovereignty under the Constitution of the United States; and the Federal Government just in so far as the Constitution of the United States has clothed it with sovereignty. Such is a composite system, simple in theory, yet sometimes difficult in practice. This division of power in our Government distinguishes it from every other form of government that has ever existed upon the earth; and it was in this feature of it that our ancestors believed they had made a great advance in the science of human government. From the imperfection of human language it is impossible to define the position of the State Governments and the Federal Government so clearly as to leave no room for doubt; but here are some points in the Constitution, where these powers are so clearly defined and distinguished that no man in his senses can be for a moment mistaken in regard to them. Upon the question whether the power to regulate suffrage should be delegated to the general Government or reserved to the States, the understanding and opinions of the framers of our Constitution were so clear, so undoubted, so positive, that even Mr. HAMILTON, the great representative, I might almost say the incarnation of Federalism, was compelled to admit that any attempt to put into the Constitution of the United States a power in the General Government to control the question of suffrage, and the elections in the States, would be calculated to destroy the Government of the States. Yet that is what this amendment proposes to do. The power which this amendment proposes to confer upon Congress will compel the General Government to appoint judges of election to count the votes in the States, and secure the results of the colored vote; for this constitutional provision which you propose is nothing more nor less than a mere declaration, unless Congress have power to legislate and carry it into effect. Necessarily, therefore, the power of enforcing it must go with it, and if that goes with it where is to be the end? How many officers of the Government must be sent into the States to take charge of the elections and to see that the persons for whose benefit the amendment is made are admitted to vote? The Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. SUMNER) seems to find in the Constitution, as it now stands, the power; but his great teacher, Judge STORY, never thought that the attempt to put such provision in the Constitution would show a premeditated design to destroy the State Governments. I maintain that the right to fix the qualifications of voters is essential to a republican form of government, and that no State which has not the right to determine for itself who shall and who shall not vote, can be called republican, for it has lost the power to govern itself. If Congress can determine who shall and who shall not vote in Indiana, the people of Indiana no longer govern themselves. This is not a proposition by way of amendment of the Constitution; it is a proposition by way of revolution—a proposition to overturn the Constitution and the very idea in which it was born and in which it has lived, and the destruction of which our republican institutions survive. Suppose the proposition were to amend the Constitution which declares the United States shall guarantee to each State a republican form of government, by striking out the word "republican" and insert "monarchical," it would not be an amendment to the Constitution; it would be revolution. But it is scarcely less so for the Federal Government to take to itself the control over the suffrage in the States, because in doing so it strikes at the life of our republican institutions. It is essential to the liberty of a State and to the liberty of the individual within the State that the State shall be unrestricted in its power to govern itself, and in order to govern itself it must have the right to determine who shall vote and who shall not vote; because it is in this voting power that the government of this country resides. Unless we can successfully resist this tendency to centralization to which the war gave new life, which is hurrying us on with a velocity which makes every honest lover of his country tremble for the future, and which is urged forward by wild and fanatical men of our time hop for joy. Unless we can resist this tendency successfully, the days of our republican institutions are already numbered. It should be remembered that the great mass of our rights and liberties are defended to us by the laws of Congress, but by the laws of the States in which we live. What defends me, as a citizen of Wisconsin, in my rights of person and property? Not the laws of Congress, but the laws of Wisconsin; and I repeat that, unless we can resist this centralizing tendency, and revive among our people more love for the States and more respect for the rights of the States, our liberties are gone.

Mr. DOOLITTLE cited from the successive platforms and acts of the Republican Party, extracts showing, he claimed, a steady advance toward centralization.

Mr. BAYARD followed. He denied that the General Government could properly under any circumstances assume the right to control suffrage in the States, because he regarded ours as a Government of specially delegated powers, all powers not so delegated being reserved to the States. But if Congress should insist upon submitting this amendment, the submission, if good faith were to be observed, should be made to Conventions or Legislatures elected, with special reference to the ratification or rejection of the amendment; and if it were so made he felt confident the people of the several States would never consent to surrender their State rights. As to the special object of the amendment, the enfranchisement of the negro, he regarded it as an experiment which, if carried out, must result disastrously to the black race; because he held it to be a well-established truth that where two races of men in onecountry are so different in organization as to prevent their fusion, equality of political power must result in a conflict between the races. To woman suffrage Mr. BAYARD declared himself opposed upon general principles.

Mr. WILLIAMS, fearing that the amendment proposed by him, to insert the words "instead born" before "citizens" in the constitutional amendment, as reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, would be misunderstood, withdrew it.

GEORGIA RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was ordered to be printed:

Whereas, The question whether the State of Georgia has become and is entitled to representation in the two Houses of Congress is now pending and undetermined; and,

Whereas, By the joint resolution of Congress, passed July 20, 1868, entitled "A resolution excluding from the Electoral College votes of States lately in rebellion, which shall not have been reorganized," it was provided that no electoral votes from any of the States lately in rebellion should be received or counted for President and Vice President of the United States until, among other things, such State should have become entitled to representation in Congress, pursuant to acts in Congress in that behalf; therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, That on the assembling of the two Houses on the second Wednesday of February, 1869, for the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice President, as provided by law, and the joint rules of the counting, or assisting to count the electoral votes, if any which may be presented as of the State of Georgia, shall not entitle the certificate, or certificates in that case these shall be reported by the President of the Senate in the following manner: "Were the votes presented as of the State of Georgia to be counted, the result would be for ——— for President of the United States, which if not counted, for ——— for President of the United States ——— votes; but in either case ——— is elected President of the United States;" and in the same manner for Vice-President.

STATIONERY CONTRACTS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, offered the following resolution, and asked its immediate consideration, but Mr. FESSENDEN objected, and it went over:

Whereas, Gen. DUNCAN, Assistant Commissioner of Patents, having, under orders of the Commissioners, made an examination and report upon contracts made in that office, implicating a firm under the style of PERSEY & TOOLS, in gross frauds, it is reported that the senior member of the firm, accompanied by an accomplice, on yesterday called Gen. DUNCAN from his room, and committed a most brutal assault, and then satisfied the letter of the law by appearing before a Justice of the Peace of the district, confessing the assault, and submitting to a fine of $5; therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether any further legislation is required to protect officials of the Government in the honest and faithful discharge of their duties.

THE OMNIBUS RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, reported a bill to aid the Northern Pacific, the Atlantic and Pacific, the Southern Pacific of California, the Little Rock, Arkansas Valley and Fort Smith, the Eastern Division of the Union Pacific, and the Oregon Branch Railroad Companies to construct their roads, by guaranteeing the interest on their bonds.

It provides that the act of July 2, 1864, granting lands in aid of the Northern Pacific Railroad, shall not be construed as granting such lands, but such alternate sections shall be set apart for the benefit of the Company, reserved from sale except as hereafter provided. All the above-named Companies, except the Oregon Branch Company, are to be afforded the Government guarantee of the payment of the interest on their thirty-year six per cent. gold bonds to the extent of $30,000 per mile; the principal of said bonds to constitute a first lien upon all their real and personal property. The Companies are also authorized to issue subsequent mortgage bonds on said property, not exceeding one-half the amount per mile of the bonds first mentioned. As security and indemnity for its guarantee, the United States Government will withhold payment of all dues for transportation of troops and Government property, retain all moneys realized from the sale of lands where any have heretofore been granted, and after securing the payment of the interest, apply the residue to the redemption of the bonds as they may mature, and also require the said companies to pay in to the Treasury of the United States ten per cent. of their total gross earnings and receipts, exclusive of the proceds of bonds. If any company shall fail to pay over semi-annually ten per cent. of its gross receipts, such default may be treated as evidence of bankruptcy, and the company will be subject to proceedings against it under the Bankrupt laws. The Oregon Branch of the Central Pacific, and the Union Pacific, Eastern Division, Companies are authorized by combination to form a corporation under the style of the United States Southern Pacific Railroad Company, to construct a railroad and telegraph line between the 34th and 36th parallels through New-Mexico to a junction with the Southern Pacific of California on the Colorado River.

The bill going almost immediately to the Government Printing Office, it is impossible at present to give further details, which relate mainly to descriptions of the respective portions of the Southern Trunk Line to be constructed by the various comparisons and to the manner of receiving and selling the lands, making reports, &c.

Mr. WILSON wished to be understood that the minority of the Committee reserved the right to make separate reports.

Mr. MORGAN made a minority report against the bill, because he thought it inexpedient and injudicious for the Government to guarantee the bonds of any railway company to any extent, or for any purpose; also because there were special objections to guaranteeing these bonds, imposing in the aggregate an obligation upon the Government of $144,000,000.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, the order for an evening session was rescinded.

CHINAMEN AND INDIANS.

Mr. CORBETT then briefly addressed the Senate in advocacy of his amendment excluding Chinamen and Indians, which, he said, he had proposed because he thought it would be most unwise to admit to citizenship a race of pagans, who worship wooden gods, and who, if allowed to vote, would come over from China in vast numbers and take possession of the whole Pacific coast.

Mr. SAULSBURY, who had a large package on his desk, said he intended to address the Senate upon the proposed amendment, but preferred not to do so now.

Mr. DRAKE asked him if the package on his desk contained his speech, because if it did, he (Mr. DRAKE) would move to adjourn.

Mr. SAULSBURY—I will say to my friend from Missouri, that this is a question of such magnitude, of such vast importance to my country, that I find it unnecessary to confine myself to writing what I have to say in the discussion of it. I shall trust to the "inspiration of the hour." [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON submitted the following form of amendment:

"There shall be no discrimination in any State among the citizens of the United States in the exercise of the elective franchise in any election therein, or in the qualification for office in any State, on account of race or color, birth, religious faith, education, or property.

Mr. SUMNER moved to go into Executive Session, which was lost, and at 4 o'clock the Senate adjourned till Monday at 12 o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. BROOKS presented a petition of the New-York Chamber of Commerce against any further secret sales of Government bonds or gold.

Mr. MOORE presented the petition of shipowners of Lewisport, Me., praying the intervention of Congress to protect all engaged in navigation from illegal action by State and municipal corporations.

Mr. KELLEY presented the protest of the Yates County Agricultural Society, of New-York, against opening the markets of the United States to the productions of the Dominion of Canada, through a new treaty of reciprocity, so-called.

Mr. GETZ presented two memorials from citizens of Reading, Penn., praying for the repeal of the duties on imported barley. Referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JULIAN presented the memorial of a Convention from all parts of New-England in favor of granting the right of suffrage to women. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

It recites in a preamble that all human beings are created equal, and that women are deprived of their natural equality when they are denied the right of suffrage which is given to all men. It is signed by JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE, President, and CHARLES K. WHIPPLE and GEORGE H. VIBBERT, Secretaries.

PRIVATE RELIEF.

The Committee on Military Affairs being called for reports of a private character, bills were reported from that Committee and passed as follows: For the relief of SAMUEL R. MOORE, private, of the Fifth Ohio Volunteers; for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of CHARLES C. COOK, Seventy-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers; for the relief of WILLIAM T. SCOTT, Adjutant, Fourth Iowa Volunteers; for the relief of certain companies of scouts and guides organized in Alabama; for the relief of Capt. GEORGE W. SHORT, Sixty-third Ohio Volunteers; for the relief of BENJAMIN MALONE, late additional Paymaster in the army, and his sureties, releasing them from liability for $68,000, Government funds, of which Paymaster MALONE was robbed in Washington on the 22d of February, 1864, without fault or negligence on his part. This latter bill was, after considerable discussion, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the private calendar.

Adverse reports were made from the Military Committee on claims of officers for three months' pay proper under the act of March 3, 1865, beyond the limits fixed by the law; and on the memorial of the Common Council of Pittsburg for the removal of the Allegheny Arsenal beyond the city limits.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the same Committee, reported a bill for the relief of JOHN E. RESSIDE and his sub-contractor. After debate the bill was passed.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The morning hour having, at 1:30 o'clock, expired,

Mr. HOOPER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill to prevent the further increase of the public debt and for other purposes, and asked that it be printed and recommitted, he giving notice that he would call it up next week.

The bill is as follows:

A BILL to prohibit the further increase of the public debt and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of any existing law as authorizes the issue of bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury, except for the substitution to the various railroad companies now authorized by law, be and the same are hereby repealed; provided, that this act shall not affect any authority for the issuance of bonds, or for the exchange of mutilated or defaced bonds; and that the Secretary of the Treasury may issue upon such terms and under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe registered bonds in exchange for coupon bonds, which have been or may hereafter be lawfully issued, such bonds to be similar in all respects to the bonds issued under the acts authorizing the issue of the bonds offered for exchange.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall publish monthly a statement of the public debt as it existed at the close of the preceding month, in which statement the United States bonds shall be classed as funded debt. The United States notes and fractional notes issued for circulation as money, shall be classed as the currency debt. The three per cent certificates shall be classed as the temporary loan debt, and all debt that is past due or that will become due within the fiscal year stating the same in detail, shall be classed as the matured debt, and the interest on such matured debt shall cease after it becomes due. The statements shall also contain the amount outstanding of subsidy bonds issued to railroad companies, the Navy Pension fund, and any other recorded obligations of the Treasury, the amount outstanding of gold certificates, and the amount of coin and currency notes in the Treasury.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act no per centage, deduction, or compensation of any amount or kind shall be allowed to any person for the sale, negotiation or exchange of any bonds or securities of the United States, or of any coin or bullion disposed of at the Treasury Department or elsewhere on account of the United States; and all acts and parts of acts authorizing or permitting by construction or otherwise the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint any other than some proper officer of his Department to make such sale, or the negotiation of bonds and securities, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That after the passage of this act all exchange, purchases or sales of the bonds of the United States on account of the Government, which may be authorized by law, shall be made by inviting the competition of the public by advertising for proposals for any such exchange, purchase or sales, which shall be awarded publicly to the best bidder or bidders, the Secretary of the Treasury reserving the right to reject any such bids, should he deem it for the public interest to do so.

Mr. RANDALL said he would like the gentleman from Massachusetts to indicate the time when he would call up the bill, as it was a very important bill, and there should be a full House to consider it. In his opinion it should be passed.

Mr. HOOPER said he proposed to call it up about the middle of next week.

Explanations in reference to the 2d and 3d sections were made by Mr. SCHENCK to show that they were not plagiarisms from another bill introduced by Mr. SCHENCK and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and by Messrs. JUDD, RANDALL and others on the same subject.

The bill was then ordered to be printed and recommitted.

STATONERY CONTRACTS.

Mr. ELA, rising to a privileged question, referred to an assault made yesterday, in the Patent Office building, by Mr. DEMPSEY, of the firm of DEMPSEY & O'TOOLE, on Mr. SAMUEL A. DUNCAN, one of the witnesses examined before the Committee on Printing, in relation to the stationery contract with the Interior Department, and asked leave to introduce a joint resolution reciting the facts, and stating that there was good reason to believe the same contractors had practiced frauds in the supplies for the Post Office Department, and directing the Postmaster-General, and all other heads of departments, to rescind all contracts with that firm.

Mr. KERR objected to the introduction of the joint resolution, because there was no evidence before the House to sustain it.

POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. PAINE, from the Executive Committee, reported a bill to remove legal and political disabilities from a large number of persons in the reconstructed States. Ordered to be printed and recommitted.

NATIONAL BANK REPORTS.

Mr. HOOPER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill regulating the reports of national banking associations. Ordered to be printed and recommitted.

The bill requires the National Banks to make their reports to the Comptroller of the Currency on the first Monday of every month, in lieu of the quarterly and monthly statements now required, the reports for the months of January and July to be published in some newspaper at the expense of the banks.

THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House then, at 2 o'clock, went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. FERRY in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the Army Appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAINE, who has charge of the bill, stated that in view of the sentiment of the House, as presented in the discussion yesterday, he had been authorized to propose amendments to the bill, which would reduce the amount $100,000.

A discussion sprung up between Messrs. ELDRIDGE and BLAINE on the subject of the purchase of Ford's Theatre, in the City of Washington.

Mr. BLAINE spoke of the building as the place in which the greatest tragedy of modern times took place, and remarked that it was very ungracious on the part of the gentleman from Wisconsin to find fault with the Secretary of War because the place where that great tragedy was enacted had not been left open as a place of public resort. Did the gentleman mean that?

Mr. ELDRIDGE—No, Sir; will the gentleman allow me to state what I do mean?

Mr. BLAINE—It was to rescue it from that degradation that the Secretary of War took it into his control, and that Congress had given him money to vest the property in the United States.

Mr. ELDRIDGE—I wish to state that I intended to make no charge other than this: that the Secretary, as I am advised, took possession of that building without the authority of the law.

Mr. BLAINE—Then he did right.

Mr. ELDRIDGE—And the gentleman from Maine asks me whether I approved of it or not. I answered him that I do not approve of it. I approve of no act of any person, whether high or low, that is in violation, or without the authority, of law. I say that not because the Secretary of War took possession of Ford's Theatre, in which the tragedy to which he refers was perpetrated. I do not have any issue with the gentleman on that subject; but if you allow the Secretary of War to make a purchase of this kind, then you may allow him to do any other act—I care not what.

Mr. BLAINE—I asked the gentleman whether he knew anything wrong in that transaction, and if he did to state it to the House.

Mr. ELDRIDGE—I now state to the gentleman that every act done without authority of law is wrong.

Mr. BLAINE—The wrong that the gentleman alleges is that whereas that building was the scene of that merciless tragedy of the 15th of April, and while Congress was not to convene for nine months, the Secretary of War stepped forward, and using the power of the Government, said that that building should not be devoted to profane, and possibly even obscene, amusements. He did that with the approval of the vast loyal masses in the United States, and I should regret to know that a gentleman, even on that side of the House, should object to that action of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ELDRIDGE—I wish not to make any charge against any gentleman, but I repeat that such acts ought not to be done without authority of law, and when the gentleman from Maine says it was a place of profane and obscene amusements, I ask him what he means to be understood by that? Would the President of the United States have been assassinated in that building if he had not been called there by love of the amusements to which the gentleman refers? and on a day, too, which some say ought not to be violated in such a manner. I deny that a theatre is a place of obscene amusements.

Mr. BLAINE—I modified it by the word "possibly."

Mr. SHANKS—The murder of President LINCOLN was itself an act of war, and it was the duty of the Secretary of War to take such steps as became a nation in time of war.

Mr. BLAINE—I think that this discussion has gone far enough. I will close it with the remark, that if at this late day the gentleman from Wisconsin, or any other gentleman on that side of the House, desired to criticise acts which he may think to be outside of the Constitution, and outside of the laws, he made a very unfortunate selection when he attacked that act of the Secretary of War, for among the many acts that commend the name of EDWIN M. STANTON to the patriotic people of the country for all time, that will have been among the last that will be remembered with praise.

Mr. ELDRIDGE—He has done many more that will commend him to eternal infamy.

Mr. ROBINSON suggested that the building should be turned over in fee simple to the family of President LINCOLN.

Mr. MULLINS gave his views on the subjects to the great amusement and edification of the House.

Mr. SCOFIELD made the point that the discussion was out of order, and the Chairman so ruled.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reduce the appropriation for the Quartermaster's Department from $5,000,000 to $3,000,000, and proceeded to state facts showing the waste, extravagance and corruption of Quartermasters on distant posts, at the same time expressly reserving the Department at Washington from the application of his remarks.

After considerable discussion the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved an amendment providing that the commanding officer of a post may lease any vacant land or buildings belonging to the post to civilians, and turn over the proceeds to the Treasury. Adopted.

The item appropriating $1,000,000 for the arsenal and armory at Rock Island, Ills., one-half of the amount to be applied to the construction of the bridge connecting Rock Island with the cities of Rock Island and Davenport, gave rise to considerable discussion

CURRENT LITERATURE.

FAITHLESS.

We swung at anchor, where the wave
Showed great sea-banners far below;
The waters rippled up to lave
Her hand, that with its bracelets's glow,
Hung toying with the trembling tide,
That loved to kiss so fair a wrist.
In the dim distance waste and wide,
The white sails glimmer'd through the mist.

There was a silence on the sea,
A silence that I would not break;
So sweet that eve it seemed to me
To float, and for my lady's sake
To weave my fancies into rhyme,
That she would praise some happy day;
For then no fateful after-time
Had come to sweep my dreams away.

'Twere well it had been but a dream,
And yet I trusted in her truth;
Her sort eyes had an evil gleam
That slew me, and she knew no ruth.
And still the white sails pass the shore,
And melt into the purple air;
But she will watch them never more,
As faithless as her face was fair.

THE FOUR SIGHS.

From the London.

All four sighed at the same moment—not deep, long-drawn sighs, but soft, airy sighs of relief, mere bubbles upon the surface, and certainly not indicative of intense sorrow, though perchance not unmingled with pain.

Four gentlemen, in the first bloom of manhood, were lounging in easy attitudes, sipping Clos Vougeot, and nibbling devilled biscuits, in front of a blazing fire. For some ten minutes or so, not a word had been spoken. It was no "awful pause," but one of those pleasant, purring silences, which spring spontaneously from the fumes of a well-ordered and harmonious dinner—such a dinner as does equal honor to the heart of the host, and the head of his chef de cuisine. Chewing the cud of sweet, or sweetly bitter fancies, these worthy gentlemen sipped and mused, and mused and sipped; and finally, as if by a preconcerted signal, came out of their temporary fit of abstraction, and—sighed. No one opened his lips, or ventured to break the silence, until the host, after quite unnecessarily poking the fire,—and from the top,—gave a short hysterical laugh; and, assuming an air of nonchalance, betrayed by his trembling voice, stammered out, abruptly: "I am going to be married! Who will be my best man?"

Such a question, at such a time, and in such a place, could only be answered in one way. The three guests bravely volunteered, to a man, for the dismal duty; but to their infinite surprise, failed to extract from their evidently nervous host any information as to the name, social position, or any other belongings of the future Mrs. Grenville Tremaine Jones. "Be content, my friends," said that excellent gentleman, "to wait till next Friday fortnight, and then you shall judge for yourselves. This much only will I tell you. She is young, she is beautiful, exceedingly, she is lovely, she's divine."

"But why marry on a Friday?" asked one. "It is unlucky to marry on that day, you know."

"As for luck—it is unlucky to marry on any day," was the flippant remark of another guest. "Put it off till Saturday, and then you'll have all Sunday to think over what you've done, and so repent at your leisure."

"Well," said the third, "I always looked upon you, Jones, as a marrying man; I wish you all joy; but don't cut your bachelor friends, old boy: for really your cook is an artist, and your Burgundy is irreproachable—for this side of the Channel.

"I have fixed upon Friday," their host replied, rather dryly, for he was piqued by the levity of his friends, "because it has pleased me to be married on the anniversary of my dear mother's wedding-day. And now let us talk about something else."

Upon this, bumpers were drained to the health and happiness of the adventurous pair, and, by degrees, the conversation passed through the usual phases incidental to a bachelor's gathering. But it has not yet been told how these four bachelors came to sigh all at the same moment, though for only one of them was the fatal day irrevocably fixed.

Mr. Grenville Tremaine Jones was the occupant of a semi-detached villa, in that portion of Asia Minor which is immediately contiguous to "The Grove." He was of a tall, slight, and rather elegant figure, with fair hair, blue eyes, a narrow forehead, and a receding chin, and in the twenty-seventh year of his age. Of a timid, gentle, and kindly disposition, he can hardly be said to have had any will or character of his own. Neither had he any particular pastimes or pursuits. Scrupulously correct in his outward man, he was also free from vice, and as simple and untutored as an English maiden, born and brought up in a rural vicarage. His father died when he was young; and his mother, a fond, foolish woman, idolized her boy, and indulged his every whim and fancy, provided it was "genteel" to do so. As a girl, she had been insipidly pretty, with long waxen ringlets, and had attracted very marked attention from junior officers of the regiments quartered in her native town, to whom she handed ices, bath-buns, and oyster-patties, across her father's counter. Two young subalterns in particular, Cornet Grenville and Lieut. Tremaine, had been pointedly assiduous, and in after times she used to allude mysteriously to certain proposals that had all but been made to her by those distinguished heroes. Failing the military, Miss Jane Blewitt had finally become the wife of Theophilus Jones, the well-known drysalter, to whom, in his old age, she bore a son and heir. In remembrance of the brilliant fortune that had almost been hers, she bestowed upon the offspring of her matured affections the name of her two youthful admirers, and flattered herself that they sounded not only genteel, but quite aristocratic. Gentility was the rock on which the good woman split. Her chief anxiety was to insure the gentility of her darling Grenville Tremaine. Indeed, the only redeeming point about the poor woman was her unselfish love for her boy, which, to his credit be it said, he reciprocated with as much warmth as his feeble nature was capable of feeling for anybody or thing. He was, therefore, much grieved at her death, which left him, at the age of four-and-twenty, absolutely alone in the world. So he resolved to travel for a year or two, in the hope of picking up some genteel acquaintance; but never got further than Paris, where he lived for six months in a boarding-house entirely frequented by English families. Here he became intimate with a young barrister, named Blake, who attached himself to his fortunes, and indoctrinated him in the art of ordering a dinner with the appropriate wines. As soon as he had acquired this amount of useful knowledge, his friend Blake carried him back to London; and, in fact, took possession of him and all that was his. It so chanced, however, that in the early part of September, when this Æduc Achates was away, the feeble and fickle Jones plucked up heart of grace to intimate to his absent tyrant that he could not again receive him as an inmate in his house. Surprised at his own audacity, and fearing lest Blake might reply to his letter in person, Mr. Jones hurried off to Hastings, where he amused himself, when the tide was out, by looking for sea-anemones in the hollows of the low, shelving rocks.

One day, while engaged in this harmless amusement, he observed that the rising tide had almost surrounded a point somewhat higher than the others, on which a young lady was half sitting, half reclining, apparently absorbed in one of Mudie's novels and totally unconscious of the approach of the waves. In vain did the timid swain endeavor to catch the maiden's eye, as he pointed to the advancing foam. The nymph remained abstracted in the fortunes of an imaginary hero, or heroine, and paid no heed to the increasing vehemence of his warnings. At length, when the rock was completely cut off from the mainland, she slowly raised her eyes, and seemed in an instant to take in the whole danger of her situation. For one moment she gazed upon the deepening waters with well-simulated terror, then suddenly threw herself on her knees in the attitude of supplication—first contriving, however, by a mysterious feminine movement, to knock off her hat, thereby causing her hair to fall loose in a perfect deluge of gold over her shoulders and down to her waist. For the first time in his life Mr. Jones was moved by a generous impulse, and, without once thinking of his patent leather boots, he splashed through the water up to his knees, snatched up in his arms the trembling little Venus, and carried her far above high-water mark before he would suffer her to quit her foot to the ground. Even then he insisted upon seeing her safe to her own door, in spite of her mild remonstrances. She was sure he must be fatigued with carrying her all that distance; he would catch cold; a dreadful cold; she should never forgive herself if he did. Mr. Jones not only saw her into her own house, but extorted, without much difficulty, permission to call and inquire after her health on the morrow. After that they met every day, and were together the whole day, either sauntering along the esplanade, roaming about Fairlight, or looking out over the sea from the heights of the castle. By degrees Mr. Jones extracted from the artless damsel as much of her history as he cared to know. Her name was Clara Knyvett; she was the daughter of an Indian officer, an only child, and an orphan. She had been brought up by her aunt as a governess, and was seeking a situation, when ill-health compelled her to proceed to the seaside. With men of ordinary nerve and self-complacency, the affair would soon have been brought to a matrimonial issue, for the little lady took no pains to disguise her feelings; but Mr. Jones' diffidence refused to see in her demonstrative frankness anything more than a childlike reverence for strength and courage,—the qualities in which he happened to be singularly deficient.

Still, time, that overcomes all difficulties, would, probably, in the long run, have overcome even the imbecile reserve of Mr. Jones, had not circumstances have occurred of quite an unexcepted character. His charmer met him one morning in a state of painful depression. Now and again a stifled sob would burst forth, or the handkerchief would be furtively raised to the eyes. If a good man, struggling with adversity, is a spectacle agreeable to the gods, tears and sighs are by no means pleasant, or even safe, for men to witness in a pretty woman. Poor Grenville was deeply touched; and, at length, after much entreaty, he discovered that she had received a letter announcing the serious illness of her kind aunt, and summoning her to what would probably prove a death-bed scene; but, alas! her quarter's pension, as the child of an Indian officer, would not be due for some days, and she was already indebted to her landlady for a week's rent and board. In an instant, the portemonnaie of Mr. Jones was pressed into her hands. He would bear no denial. She could return the money at her own convenience, and, perhaps, during her sorrowful attendance upon her sick relative, she would spare a kind thought for the lonely bachelor upon whose solitary state she had cast a ray of joy and hope. The gentleman was clearly becoming affected, and the now sobbing Clara cannot be accused of tearing herself away from him with timorous precipitancy. She gave him abundant time for saying anything more that he might like to say, or even for venturing upon some demonstrativeness by arm or lip. But Mr. Jones' courage failed him at this crisis; and they parted. Weeks passed, but the money came not; and, at last, Mr. Jones began to fear that his sweet little Clara had caught the complaint from which her aunt was suffering.

On this eventful day, however, he was startled by the unprecedented announcement that there was a lady in the drawing-room who wished to see him. He rightly divined that his visitor could be no other than the fair syren of Hastings. She had come to repay him the money he had so generously advanced in her hour of need and tribulation. She had been for a time so engrossed with constant attendance upon her dear aunt that she had not had a moment to do or think of anything else. And, when all was over, she knew it was too late to remit to Hastings, and, alas! she had mislaid his town address. She had hunted for it everywhere, when it suddenly occurred to her that she might have put his card into his portemonnaie. How delighted she was to find it there! All this, and much more, she said, in torrents of words, emphasized with the most bewitching smiles, and purified by an almost infantile simplicity. The hour and the woman had arrived. Mr. Grenville Tremaine Jones was at her feet—literally. He dropped on one knee, seized her hand, and covered it with kisses—then sprung to his feet, passed his arm around her waist, and drew her to himself, gabbling, stammering, spluttering no matter what. In less than ten minutes he had pledged himself to marry a woman of whom he knew nothing more than she had chosen to tell him. Taking the bit between his teeth, he fairly bolted from the path of reason and common sense. Not content with engaging himself, he had wrung from the lady—after a feeble show of maidenly coyness—her consent to their union taking place on Friday fortnight—and it was then Tuesday. He only regretted that his housekeeper had gone out to do some shopping, for he wished her to say whether she would retain or dismiss that worthy individual. Clara had not enough to be enraptured with everything. His housekeeper, she was quite sure, must be a treasure. She wouldn't hear of the dear old thing being sent away. She would rather stay away herself,—this was said with an arch smile and a roguish twinkle of the eye that completed the conquest of the impressionable young man, and left him her slave.

As he sipped his generous Burgundy, Mr. Grenville Tremaine Jones had been recalling this pleasant episode, and as he did so he thought how proud and happy his dear mother would have been to have welcomed his adored Clara, and how she would have taken the enchantress to her arms as her own child. And as he thought of this he SIGHED.

On the opposite side of the fireplace, and directly facing the host, sat Dr. John Bryan, a young medical practitioner, rapidly rising into repute in Bloomsbury. It so chanced that late one afternoon toward the close of the London season, he was suddenly called on to attend a young lady, residing in a dull but respectable boarding-house, who had been knocked down and run over by a hansom cab. The case was a very serious one. Not only was her arm broken, but the whole system had been seriously deranged by the shock, and there was reason to fear that some internal injury had been sustained. This last apprehension proved to be groundless; and a cure would speedily have been effected had she paid closer attention to the doctor's instructions. But, unfortunately, the little lady was slightly self-willed. The consequence was a relapse, a long convalescence, and a very long doctor's bill, though John Bryan had reduced his charges to a minimum, partly out of pity for her child-like helplessness and simplicity, partly out of admiration of the golden glory of her long flowing tresses. As Constance rather prided herself upon her ancient descent, than upon plebeian wealth, two elderly gentlemen, who had constituted themselves special champions and "blackamoors," insisted upon being allowed the privilege of acting as her bankers on this occasion; and as each stipulated that the other should know nothing about it, Miss Tayleur made rather a good thing out of her illness—the more so, as she went off, after all, without paying the bill. The landlady, also, had some reason to complain; for, in consideration of the heavy medical expenses incurred by her favorite lodger, she had allowed her to go away for a month for change of air without requiring a settlement in full previous to her departure. But when six weeks had expired, and nothing had been heard of Miss Tayleur's movements, Mrs. Robinson wrote to her at the address she had given, inquiring after her health, and when she might hope to see her again.

Instead of a reply, she received her own letter; no such person was known, nor was there any such street in Scarborough. Then the murder came out. The two old gentlemen confessed their folly, and Dr. Bryan was informed that his fascinating patient was suspected of being an adventuress. The doctor bore the news with equanimity; he merely expressed his regret at having been deceived by the artless manners of the "child of earth with the golden hair," and the affair passed away from his mind.

In the latter part of October John Bryan found himself desperately in love with the daughter of a prosperous city merchant, residing in Tybernia. Dropping in one evening to try a new duet, he was surprised to find Miss Wilkinson in a decidedly sulky humor.

"Tell me," said he gently,—"tell me, Charlotte, what is the matter?"

"There is nothing the matter," was the unsympathetic reply.

"Pardon me, Charlotte, there is something the matter. Have I offended you in any way? If so, I assure you it was quite unwittingly on my part."

The soft tone in which he spoke worked visibly in his favor. The lips trembled, and a tear stood in each eye. Making a vain effort to be calm, she asked with affected indifference,

"By the way, do you happen to know a Miss Constance Tayleur?"

"Well, I wish I could say No," said he, laughing. But surely, Charlotte, Miss Tayleur is not one of your friends? Question for question: How long have you known her? What is she? Where is she?"

"Stop, stop, Dr. Bryan, you are a bad catechist; you give me no time to reply. If you particularly wish to obtain her address from Harriet Fielding, who said me all about it after you had gone, Dr. Bryan, your conduct was disgraceful. It was not what—what—what" the poor girl's dignity fairly broke down, and she burst into tears.

"My dear Charlotte," said John Bryan, tenderly soothing her, "you have been entirely misinformed as to the matter." Whereupon he quietly told her the whole history, and obtained ready credence for his truthful tale.

"But who is this Harriet Fielding?" he asked.

Charlotte Wilkinson laughed a merry little laugh, and nodded toward her father, who either was, or seemed to be, sound asleep, in an easy-chair, with a book lying upon his knee.

"To tell you the truth, John, Harriet Fielding is rather a friend of dear papa's than mine."

Here a snort was heard to issue from the easy-chair.

"I can't say that we know anything at all about her, except what she told us herself as we traveled up together from Hastings. She told us, or rather papa, (another growl,) that she was going up to London to look out for a situation as housekeeper to a quiet elderly widower, (a series of low growls,) and asked papa to tell her what to do. So papa very kindly recommended her to Mrs. Watkins' boarding-house, and even promised to take her there himself."

"But how is it that I have never met her here?" asked Mr. Bryan.

"O, that's just it. Papa asked her to come and spend this evening with us, and promised her some good music, as you were coming. When she heard your name, she uttered a sharp cry and turned quite pale. As soon as papa had left us, she told me that you had jilted her dear friend, Constance Tayleur, and declared that nothing on earth would ever induce her to meet you."

"I'm very sorry, I am sure, to be deprived of the pleasure of making Miss Fielding's acquaintance; but I was not aware that I was such a terrible ogre among confiding spinsters. What sort of person is she?"

"O, she is a little fairy, with the sweetest voice and the most silvery laugh in the whole world; and such hair,—a perfect cascade of gold when she loosens the band and lets it fall down over her shoulders."

"Show me her photograph!" exclaimed the young doctor, springing to his feet and pouncing upon the album. "Show me her photograph, Charlotte. It is the little witch herself, or I am a Dutchman!"

Dr. John Bryan was no Dutchman. The sun-picture clearly established the identity of Harriet Fielding and Constance Tayleur; but fierce was Mr. Wilkinson's indignation on discovering, as he said, that he had taken a viper to his bosom. John Bryan, however, calmed his fury, and promised very soon to clear the neighborhood of "the cockatrice." On the morrow he instructed his friend Stephen Hawkhurst to proceed against her with "the utmost rigor of the law" for the recovery of his bill for attendance and medicines. But it was not the money he cared about at all. His only anxiety, and it was shared by Charlotte Wilkinson, was to frighten the dangerous schemer to a sufficient distance from Tyburnia to prevent her from encountering Wilkinson père in one of his impressionable moods. And as he thought of her youth, her beauty, her infantile simplicity of manner, and then of her profound duplicity, her unscrupulous artfulness, her utter disregard for truth, it is not surprising that he, too, should have SIGHED.

Mr. Hawkhurst, the solicitor, was over head and ears in love, for the first time in his life, and at first sight; and this is the way it came to pass:

Stephen Hawkhurst was the fifth son of a country gentleman, with a small, unencumbered estate of about £1,200 a year. He was articled to a respectable solicitor in Lincoln's Inn Fields, and in due time became an attorney-at-law on his own account.

Luckily for him, or perhaps unluckily, he had been adopted and brought up by a maiden aunt, who left him a snug little fortune of £7,000 odd, put out on excellent security, at five per cent. interest. As a natural consequence of this legacy, Stephen Hawkhurst never had, or wished to have, a silent client. But the unprecedented necessity for doing something had exercised a galvanic effect upon the torpid mind of Stephen Hawkhurst, who wrote to Miss Harriet Fielding three letters, each more peremptory than the preceding one, insisting upon immediate payment, with the threat of legal proceedings in the event of non-compliance with his demand. No notice being paid to these epistolary gems, he took out a writ; and having nothing in the world to do, proceeded to the distant region of Tyburnia, to serve it with his own hands.

Never was a man more completely annihilated than Mr. Hawkhurst when he was ushered into the presence of a bright, sunny little thing, wreathed in smiles, and beaming with kindliness and fun.

It was no good of him, she said, to come all the way to see her. She knew she had been dreadfully rude in not answering his letters, but she was so afraid of lawyers—they were so awfully clever. Besides, it was so very awkward; for just at that moment it really was not quite convenient to pay her dear friend Dr. Bryan. She could never forget how kind he was to her. Somebody had been making mischief and setting him against her, and she knew nobody in London, and was so ignorant of business; and then she threw herself on the sofa, and hid her face, and had a good cry.

This was more than Mr. Hawkhurst bargained for. Though a lawyer, he was still a man; and it might be added, a very weak man. Instead of snubbing the girl in the right way, and wishing himself back in Raymond Buildings, all the time the golden-haired sprite was speaking to him; but when she broke down and sobbed, he jumped up and exclaimed, "John Bryan is a brute, and I am no better! I must serve this writ on you, though upon my word, I feel I am a beast to do it. But don't cry—I'll make it all right. Do forgive me. I had no idea you were an—an—angel!" With that he rushed out of the room, down stairs and into the street. His back, however, was scarcely turned before both envelope and writ were in full blaze, while the little lady was almost convulsed with laughter at the discomfiture of her enemy.

When Mr. Hawkhurst returned to his chambers, his first impulse was to send Miss Fielding a check for the entire sum. But he was quite as little accustomed to writing billet-doux as to serving writs; so that by the time he had torn up half a quire of note paper, his passion had cooled down to the value of £50. Sending a porter to the bank for a note to that amount, he inclosed it in a sheet of paper containing only the words, "From a sincere friend and admirer;" and dispatched it by a messenger, with instructions to leave it at the door, and on no account to say who had sent him. She will recognize, he thought, the monogram on the envelope.

Poor man! it is as well that he was not present when the "angel" opened the note left by his messenger. She never for a moment troubled herself to look at the monogram or the handwriting; but pocketed the money with a smile, under the full impression that it came from her old beau, the City Merchant. Mr. Hawkhurst, however, continued in a fool's paradise all that evening. He still went on building castles, until the sudden thought stabbed him like a dagger, "What if she is already in love with another?"

Cold drops stood upon his forehead; there was a feeling of suffocation in his throat. With a violent effort he gulped down half a wine-glass full of Burgundy, and then relieved his momentary anguish with a sigh.

Mention has already been made of Edmund Blake, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. The moment we were introduced to Mr. Blake was his means of locomotion. He would be in Paris one week, in Edinburgh another, then he would be seen in Manchester or Liverpool, and he never carried anything but an old carpet-bag with him, it was rumored among his friends that he generally took French leave of mine host of the hotel he might chance to honor with his company. On one occasion, he happened to be at Brighton, lodging in the house of a respectable widow lady, in straitened circumstances, who had denied herself everything in order to bestow a brilliant education upon her only child, in the hope of obtaining for her a comfortable home as governess or companion.

Mary White had just left school at the time Mr. Blake engaged her mother's back and front parlors. She was a joyous, bright little thing, with a profusion of golden hair, which she was fond of letting down over her shoulders. Her voice was the very essence of harmony; her manners bewitchingly simple; her eyes beamed with seemingly artless, confiding affection; her rippling smiles were altogether irresistible. Edmund Blake made no attempt to resist them. For upward of a fortnight he raved about her, and to her. There was nothing he would not do for her. She should have her carriage and pair, a house near Hyde Park, a stall at the Opera—he thought of promising a box, but changed his mind. But Mary remarked that his collars and cuffs were particularly ragged, that he had only one pair of boots, and they were [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

BLUE AND WHITE.

From Every Saturday.

"Of all the colors, sweet Sir, what may your favorite be?"
And the lad I had nurst back so life-like looked up, and made answer to me:
"Two colors I choose—blue and white." Then up from my throat did there spread,
Yea, to my very temples, a dye of the happy red;
For a maiden's face will flush at the lightest thing evermore;
And blue was the ribbon that bound my hair, and white was the gown that I wore.

"May I tell you all, lady sweet?" "Ay, Sir, an' it please you so."
All alone with each other we sat in the fire-light's glow;
He, the lad whom our men had found nigh dead close by,
And the mother that bare him could never have nurst him more gently than I.

"Sister,—nay, pardon my freedom,—but O, you have been so good,
I well could wish that I owed you the duty of brotherhood;
Crown your sweet favors with this, the greatest of all, and be
As tender to her I love, as you have been tender to me."

Then over very sense there swept down a terrible dim
Dusk of oblivion, as there I sat and listened to him.
Silence a moment, and then, by the helping of God, His grace,
I answered: Yea, brother, I will," with a very smile on my face.

"Now, God bless you, sister. Listen. A year ago
She gave herself to me forever, and ever, and so,
One sweet Autumn eve, in the time of the falling of dew,
I gemmed her little white hand with a circlet of sapphires blue.

"She, my own lady, taketh ever the most delight
In the calm virginal colors,—the delicate blue and white;
And, sister, mine eyes were soothed with a sense of lonesome repose
When I saw you this evening wear the hues that my darling chose."

Oh! but the bonnie blue ribbon pressed on my head all too tight;
Oh! but my heart beat wild beneath its virginal white;
Oh! but the hours were long as I knelt in the dark alone,
Moaning: "My Father, teach me to say but, 'Thy will be done.'"

TALES OF THE TOWER.

From "Her Majesty's Tower," by Hepworth Dixon.

ASPECT OF THE TOWER.

"Half-a-mile below London Bridge, on ground which was once a bluff, commanding the Thames from St. Saviour's Creek to St. Ov. ve's Wharf, stands the Tower; a mass of ramparts, walls and gates, the most ancient and most poetic pile in Europe. Seen from the hill outside, the Tower appears to be white with age and wrinkled by remorse. The home of our stoutest kings, the grave of our noblest knights, the scene of our gayest revels, the field of our darkest crimes, that edifice speaks at once to the eye and to the soul. Gray keep, green tree, black gate and frowning battlement, stand out, apart from all objects far and near from them, menacing, picturesque, enchanting; working on the senses like a spell; and calling us away from our daily mood into a world of romance, like that which we find painted in light and shadow on SHAKESPEARE'S page. Looking at the Tower as either a prison, a palace or a court, picture, poetry and drama crowd upon the mind, and the fancy dwells most frequently on the State prison, this is because the soul is more readily kindled by a human interest than fired by an archaic and official fact. For one man who would care to see the room in which a council met or a court was held, a hundred men would like to see the chamber in which Lady JANE GREY was lodged, the cell in which Sir WALTER RALEIGH wrote, the tower from which Sir JOHN OLDCASTLE escaped. Who would not like to stand for a moment by those steps on which ANN BOLEYN knelt; pause by that slit in the wall through which ARTHUR DE LA POLE gazed, and linger, if he could, in that room in which Archbishop CRANMER, LATIMER and RIDLEY searched the New Testament together?

AGE OF THE TOWER.

Even as to length of days, the Tower has no rival among palaces and prisons; its origin, like that of the Iliad, that of the Sphinx, that of the Newton Stone, being lost in the nebulous ages, long before our definite history took shape. Old writers date it from the days of CESAR; a legend taken up by SHAKESPEARE and the poets, in favor of which the name of Cesar's tower remains in popular use to this very day. A Roman wall can even yet be traced near some parts of the ditch. The Tower is mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle, in a way not incompatible with the fact of a Saxon stronghold having stood upon this spot. The buildings, as we have them now in block and mass, were commenced by WILLIAM the Conqueror; and the series of apartments in Cesar's tower—hall, gallery, council chamber, chapel—were built in the early Norman reigns, and used as a royal residence by all our Norman Kings. What can Europe show to compare against such a tale? Set against the Tower of London—with its eight hundred years of historic life, its nineteen hundred years of traditional fame—all other palaces and prisons appear like things of an hour. The oldest bit of palace in Europe, that of the west front of the Burg in Vienna, is of the time of HENRY III. The Kremlin in Mosgow, the Doge's Palazzo in Venice, are of the fourteenth century. The Seraglio in Stamboul was built by MOHAMMED II. The oldest part of the Vatican was commenced by BORGIA, whose name it bears. The old Louvre was commenced in the reign of HENRY VIII.; the Tuileries in that of ELIZABETH. In the time of our civil war Versailles was yet a swamp. Sans Souci and the Escorial belong to the eighteenth century. The Serail of Jerusalem is a Turkish edifice. The palaces of Athens, of Cairo, of Tehran, are all of modern date. Neither can the prisons which remain in fact as well as in history and drama—with the one exception of St. Angelo in Rome—compare against the Tower. The Bastile is gone; the Bargello has become a museum; the Piombi are removed from the Doge's roof. Vincennes, Spandau, Spielberg, Magdeburg, are all modern in comparison with a jail from which RALPH FLAMBARD escaped so long ago as the year 1100, the date of the First Crusade.

BUILDERS OF THE TOWER.

Two great architects designed the main parts of the Tower: GUNDULF the Weeper and HENRY the Builder; one a poor Norman Monk, the other a great English King. GUNDULF, a Benedictine friar, had, for that age, seen a great deal of the world; for he had not only lived in Rouen and Caen, but had traveled in the East. Familiar with the glories of Saracenic art, no less than with the Norman simplicities of Bec, St. Ouen, and St. Etienne; a pupil of LANFRANC, a friend of ANSELM; he had been employed in the monastery of Bec to marshal, with the eye of an artist, all the pictorial ceremonies of his church. But he was chiefly known in that convent as a weeper. No monk at Bec could cry so often and so much as GUNDULF. He could weep with those who wept; nay, he could weep with those who sported; for his tears welled forth from what seemed to be an unfailing source. As the price of his exile from Bec, GUNDULF received the crozier of Rochester, in which city he rebuilt the cathedral, and perhaps designed the castle, since the great keep on the Medway has a sister's likeness to the great keep on the Thames. His works in London were—the White Tower, the first St. Peter's Church, and the Old Barbican, afterward known as the Hall Tower, and now used as the Jewel-house. * * HENRY III., a Prince of epical fancies, as "Corfe," "Conway," "Beaumaris," and many other fine poems in stone attest, not only spent much of his time in the Tower, but much of his money in adding to its beauty and strength. ADAM DE LAMBURN was his master mason; but HENRY was his own chief clerk of the works. The Water gate, the embanked wharf, the Cradle tower, the Lanthorn, which he made his bedroom and private closet, the Galleyman tower, and the first wall, appear to have been his gifts. But the

ITALY.

The Session—A Hosts Chimera—The Religious Services—Changes in the French Ministry—The Political Situation—Cardinal Antonelli—Personal Intelligence—A Hunt—Velocipede Mania.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ROME, Tuesday, Jan. 5, 1869.

Here, in the Eternal City, the year begins with a bright sun. We have, for the first time in many days, the fresh, bracing tramontana, which comes over the snow-crowned mountains, quickening the blood and invigorating the whole frame, while the glorious arch above is all deep, deep blue, unflecked by a single cloud. The nights are cold, with a slight frost, and here and there thin ice, which is not a common sight here. The difference between our more steely and these softer skies has been thus quaintly characterized—that at home it looks as if one might cut through and come to the white, while here there seems no limit to these depths of perfect blue. These first few days of January make one appreciate and feel especially thankful for the great boon of existence.

A FESTA CHIUSA.

The year begins with a festa chiusa, which is strictly observed, all the shops being closed, and services held in many of the churches, in commemoration of the circumcision of the Saviour! Among the Roman Princes and the foreign Ambassadors visits are interchanged; but our American custom of New-Year presents is adjourned to the befana, the evening before Twelfth Night, which is made a scene of great frolicking. A portion of the city, near the fine Piazza Navona, where no carriages are allowed to pass the streets, is filled with little booths well stocked with penny trumpets, drums, tambourines, rattles, jumping-jacks and other similar toys; and the fun consists in making as much noise as possible; while every now and then processions are formed, the leader, in grotesque costume, holding high a large jumping-jack, while his followers toot and drum and rattle to their hearts' content. Of course, there is a crowd. At about 11 o'clock the fun becomes fast and furious, and woe to the unfortunate forestieri who exhibit resentment at, or shrinking from, the din which is heard on all sides. That is the signal for a general rush at them at once, and all conceivable noises are poured into their ears, the performers dancing and shouting and laughing around their bewildered victims, whose only safety consists in doing likewise with as good a grace as possible, or in beating a speedy retreat. It is a good-natured, innocent sort of saturnalia, a prelude, in fact, to the merry-making of the carnival which this year begins with the first week of February, for Easter comes unusually early—on the 28th of March.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES.

Of religious services during the past week, those at the Gesu, the Church of the Jesuits, were the most striking. The church is large, very rich in its marbles and other adornments, and the numerous lights around the high altar and the chancel were beautifully and effectively arranged. There was a crowded and distinguished attendance, tickets being issued for the reserved chairs, which filled pack up one-half of the great nave, while the rest of the church was open to all comers. The Pope, with his usual retinue, was present, passing between two rows of soldiers, and arriving just before the Te Deum, which was well sung by two fine choirs, each, with its separate organ, taking alternate parts of the music. When this was finished, there was a rush for the Piazza in front of the church, which was lined with soldiers, and already well filled with people, the Altieri and other adjacent palaces displaying red and gold hangings from all their windows. Unluckily, there was quite a heavy rain, but as the Pope came out of the church, and drove off with his gorgeous carriages, the bands struck up, the bells rang, and the crowd cheered and waved their hats and handkerchiefs, and cried, "Viva il nostro santa padre," and crossed themselves with some show of real enthusiasm. Since the late revolution in Spain the Jesuits of Rome have received large accessions to their numbers; and it was remarked by travelers who happened to come over the railroads at the time, that these prudent refugees had not started with empty hands, good large bags of silver dollars constituting a notable part of their not otherwise excessive baggage. During the past few days the new Spanish Minister, Señor PAREDES, has made his appearance, whether to be received by the Pope or not remains to be seen, though the Papal Nuncio is still at Madrid.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

In the French Legation extensive changes are announced in consequence of the appointment of the Marquis DE LAVALETTE as Minister of Foreign Affairs. The Ambassador remains, but the Secretaries, who were here and prominent during the late Garibaldi fiasco, retire—though it is given out from the Vatican that there will be no essential change in the policy of France as to the Roman question. The threatened difficulties between Turkey and Greece are looked upon here with apprehension; for once apply the match, and who can tell what general explosion may not follow! A war anywhere in Europe would lead to complications and involve consequences which the Pontifical Government certainly desires to avoid, for the continued existence of the temporal power hangs upon too slender a thread to risk any fresh disturbances.

CARDINAL ANTONELLI.

In company with Mr. LONGFELLOW, who is much feted here, his brother-in-law, Mr. APPLETON, Mr. JOHN C. CRUGER, of New-York, Mr. GEO. W. CHILDS and Mr. PETERSON, of Philadelphia, and Mr. HOOKER, I had a pleasant interview, by special appointment, with the Cardinal Secretary of State. His handsome rooms are au troisieme in the Vatican, just above those of the Pope, and overlooking all Rome; and they are filled with pictures, bronzes and other objects of art, for in this, as in political affairs, ANTONELLI is very much interested. We had an easy, animated conversation of over half an hour, the Cardinal speaking French fluently, though with an unmistakable Italian accent. He talked of Rome with its treasures of statutes, pictures and marbles, of the progress of our own country, and the gratifying exhibition of a determination to reduce and discharge the debt, of the vast and universal expenditure throughout Europe in maintaining large armies "to preserve peace," which had become almost as costly as making war, and his courteous, easy manners and agreeable conversation impressed us all. He was especially pleased to see Mr. LONGFELLOW, of whose poems he was not ignorant, for though not speaking, he understands English. Among other curiosities, the Cardinal has the largest collection extant of specimens of marbles from all parts of the world—the United States, of course, included, from Vermont to California—and he mentioned, with admiration, our green marble as resembling the verd-antique, by which name, in fact, it is now known in commerce. The collection embraces over 3,000 specimens, all about four inches long, two and a half wide, and half an inch thick, well polished, with—on the back of each—a label describing it, and has been the work of a lifetime, for he began it, as he told us, in his early youth. In other drawers, all carefully arranged, there are immumerable ancient rings, lockets, seals, precious stones, and jewelry, and other treasures of art, among them a gold chain of perhaps a dozen strands, of exquisite fineness and workmanship, from which was suspended a little golden locket. This was a scent bottle, the stopper being kept tight in its place by an ingenious arrangement of rings, through which the chains passed; was of Etruscan workmanship, anterior to Rome, and probably some 3,000 years ago adorned the neck of some fair Tuscan lady. The utmost skill of the present day cannot excel, if equal, the workmanship of this beautiful relic of ancient art. The whole collection is carefully arranged in flat drawers, in cases shutting with [illegible] doors, and suitably locked after by the Cardinal himself, who permits no one to touch [illegible]

PERSONAL INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. MACPHERSON, whose photographic studio has been one of the most attractive institutions of Rome, invited most of the resident artists, with their friends, to see the Old Year out at his house. It was a pleasant gathering; for while of our countrymen we had RANDOLPH, ROGERS, HEALY, IMOZIER, BUCHANAN READ, FREEMAN, INMAN, COLEMAN and others, there was also LEIGHTON, the Royal Academician, fresh from Egypt and the Pyramids, and BIERSTADT, with his reminiscences of beautiful Capri, and RICHMOND, one of the most promising of England's younger artists, with other travelers from all parts of the world abroad, to tell of their different experiences. Later there was an adjournment to the American Club, where BUCHANAN READ, in his best vein, recited two of his own poems, "Drifting," and "Sheridan's Ride," which were received with long and loud applause.

A HUNT.

The hunt, on Monday, at the Tor de tre Teste, was the most successful of the season in point of attendance, certainly, and from the nature of the ground, those who had driven out in carriages were fortunate enough to see a good run, which ended in the fox doubling and getting safely to earth close by the tent, and almost among the spectators. There were many ladies riding, a score or more of pink coats, and a field of over a hundred following the hounds. It was a lovely day, with capital ground, the campagna dotted here and there with picturesque old ruins, and in the distance the Alban and Sabine ranges, with the still further snow-crowned mountains to fill up the picture on one side, while back of us the sculptured saints on the top of the Lateran stood out in bold relief against the clear blue sky—and crowning all, the glorious dome of St. Peter! At the previous meeting, one of those rare accidents occurred, the possible exposure to which adds to the pleasurable excitement of hunting here. An Englishman, who had been for some time riding hard, had discounted the unbuckle the girths of his saddle, and while walking along, leading his horse by the bridle, he felt a sudden check, and turning quickly saw his horse's hind legs sink under him, until with a scream of agony most human in its despairing tones—he disappeared entirely. The horse could be heard as he went down deeper and deeper, till he must have reached the bottom of what proved to be one of the old wells, which, covered over with vegetation, give no warning of the danger until it is too late to guard against it. The opening was so narrow that the saddle was forced off the animal's back as he scraped down, and while it was a fortunate escape for the rider, there seems to have been no means of extricating the poor beast, who was therefore left to his horrible fate.

VELOCIPEDE MANIA.

Following the example of Paris and New-York, we have a few velocipedes here, but it is not easy to find a sufficient stretch of level country for them, and then I fancy, too, the exercise of the legs is of rather too arduous a nature to suit this indolent race. There are one or two adventurous performers of an afternoon on the Pincian, where they attract great notice and many curious comments; but the space is too limited and the carriages too thick to admit of their being much used there, except in the mornings, when the fashionable resort is given up to nurses and children. On a bright afternoon, especially unsafe days, there is almost a week, there is a perfect jam of equipages, whose course is regulated by the mounted dragoons, who allow of no deviation from the prescribed line. With the crowd of pedestrians it makes a very pretty sight; and then, too, from the platform overlooking the Piazza del Popolo, there is, perhaps, as good an opportunity as anywhere in Rome of seeing the wonderful coloring as the sun sinks to rest in his canopy of clouds just behind St. Peter's, and pours a golden glory upon the dome, the angel which surmounts St. Angelo and the whole city. As the bells of the innumerable churches ring out the Ave Marie there is a general exodus, and the Pincian is left to the sole care of its few and faithful sentinels. K.

CONFISCATED REBEL PROPERTY.

Test Case in Louisiana—Property Mortgaged to J. P. Benjamin.

From the New-Orleans Bee, Jan. 31.

Some of our professional readers may remember that proceedings were instituted last Spring by the heirs of Mrs. MICOU, in the United States District Court in this State, having for their object the setting aside of the decree of confiscation of certain property in Jefferson Parish, mortgaged, in the year 1858, by J. P. and JOSEPH BENJAMIN in favor of Mrs. ANNA MICOU (widow of the late W. C. MICOU, an eminent lawyer of this city) but condemned as forfeited to the United states, in accordance with the prayer of libel filed against J. P. BENJAMIN, under the act of Congress of July 16, 1862. The United States Court in August, 1868, set aside and annulled this decree of confiscation, so far as the mortgage interests of Mrs. MICOU'S heirs were concerned, and restored them to their mortgage rights upon the property. The decree, however, was not made final, a reservation having been made, allowing the United States, until the 1st of November last, to file additional briefs on a reargument. The United States Government has not availed itself of this reservation, but L. MADISON DAY, the purchaser of the property, has resisted the operation of the annulling decree, and seeks to hold on to the property. He presented further argument to the Court why he should not be divested of the possession and ownership of the property thus acquired by him, and the matter is yet under advisement with the Court.

But another and distinct proceeding has been instituted by Mrs. MICOU'S heirs in the District Court for the parish of Jefferson, where the property lies, by which they seek to enforce their mortgage against it. Here too they are met by L. MADISON DAY, who contends he purchased an indefeasible title to the property from the Marshal of the United States at the sale ordered by Judge DURELL under the confiscation proceedings, and that the MICOU heirs lost their opportunity of declaring their interest under the mortgage held by them by failing to make opposition during the interval between the sale and its confirmation. He contends that a monition having been published, calling upon all parties in interest to come forward and show cause why the title should not vest in him, and no one having appeared, his right to own the property cannot now be questioned. He has brought forward a great many authorities going to show that proceedings in rem—that is, against the thing, the property, as contradistin guished from a suit against the person—are good against all the world when the legal formalities have been observed, and he says they have been.

The case has been argued by Mr. DAY for himself, and by Hon. JOHN A. CAMPBELL for the MICOU heirs, and it is expected that a decision will be pronounced by the Judge of the District Court in Jefferson Parish at an early day.

We have stated the grounds upon which the purchaser claims to hold this property as against Mrs. MICOU'S mortgage, of which he asserts the proceedings in confiscation against BENJAMIN divested her. Having been favored with a perusal of the masterly argument of Judge CAMPBELL, we think our readers, or such of them as are interested in these confiscation proceedings, will be gratified by our publishing them. We are therefore tempted to lay before them this abstract:

1. Under his first proposition, Judge CAMPBELL contended that no estate or right of Mrs. ANNA D. MICOU or her heirs could be affected, impaired or destroyed in any proceedings under the act, because of any offence committed by JUDAH P. BENJAMIN; nor could any estate or right of JOS. BENJAMIN be affected by them. They were not bound to come into Court at all. Counsel quoted on this point Van Horne's Lessee vs. Dorrance, 2 Dallas, 302; Corland vs. Dean, 4 Mason, 174; Wilkinson vs. Leland, 2 Peters, 627; Beach vs. Woodhull, Peters, C. C. R., 2; Higgerson vs. Mein, 4; Cranch, 415; 5 Binney, 154; 4 Peters, S. C. R., 1.

2. Conceding, however, for the sake of the argument that plaintiffs might have been divested of their mortgage by the operation of the Confiscation law, he contended no sufficient notice had been given to plaintiffs, and no opportunity offered them to appear and defend their interests. See case of Sawyer vs. Insurance Company, 12 Mass. 291, 3 Sumner Rep., 600.

3. It was further shown and argued that there were misdescriptions of the property in the libel, the advertisements and the monition which were of a character not to put the MICOU heirs on inquiry, and these documents were sufficiently defective to vitiate the whole proceedings. See case of Ludlow's Heirs, 3 Ham., 553; 2 Howard, 47; 20 Barbour, 297.

4. It was further argued that the Confiscation act was a criminal proceeding and that the fact of Mr. BENJAMIN'S guilt was not found by a jury as required by the Constitution of the United States. The judgment of condemnation was founded on the default and contumacy of J. P. BENJAMIN, who failed to appear, and no judgment of condemnation under a criminal statute can be pronounced in the absence of the party to be affected. No such thing was ever heard of as a default in criminal proceedings. Default is not confession in a criminal case.

5. The property was not seized under orders from the President as required by the act, nor was the fact of guilt found by that branch of the Court which alone can find facts in trials for crimes.

To rebut the argument of defendant, plaintiff's counsel quoted Page vs. Generes, 6 An., 549; 8 Allen. Mass. Rep., 20; 10 Hoe, 331; 10 L., 496; 11 S. and R., 430. And to show that these proceedings should not have been brought on the Admiralty side of the Court, the following cases were quoted: Insurance Co. vs. the United States, 6 Wallace, 760; Armstrong Foundry, 6 W., 767; United States vs. Hart, 6 W., 770.

This case being a test case, a good deal of interest is felt in the result.

Andrew Johnson and Tennessee.

From the Memphis Post, Jan. 27.

It will be remembered that the Avalanche some time since, in a lengthy editorial, brought out ANDREW JOHNSON as the Conservative candidate for Governor. Yesterday's Nashville special to that journal says that it is now authoritatively announced from Washington that [illegible] is invited to enter the Gubernatorial race. Many Tennessee Republicans within the past few years have suffered so much from the bad blood fed with the inexhaustible injury he has inflicted upon the nation, that was hoping to bring our Commonwealth again under his malign influence. It becomes the Republican Party to guard against his insidious approaches. We have men in our ranks who, from their pretended Republicanism, hope to furnish him with powerful cooperation. Such traitors must be spotted, and their power for evil promptly destroyed.

THE SOUTH.

Views of a Reconstructed Rebel Officer.

The Washington correspondent of the Troy Times gives the subjoined account of an interview with an officer in the Confederate army, Gen. LONGSTREET we suppose being the officer alluded to:

Walking down Pennsylvania-avenue to-day on my usual trip to the Capitol, I fell in with an ex-Confederate officer, who carved his name high on a hundred battle-fields of treason, but who, since the unholy war ceased, has renounced the errors of his way in the same full, manly spirit with which he fought, and has accepted the decrees of fate and of Congress with a hearty and yet a dignified submission. He was exceedingly cordial and communicative, full of hope for the future, and glowingly sanguine that the South, purified from the blight of human slavery and recognizing the equal rights of all men, would grow, and flourish, and blossom all over, like unto a second land of promise.

"General," said I, "what more peril have these obstructionists at the South undergone, what more suffering have they endured, what more bravery have they shown, that they should revile you for the frank renewal of your loyalty to the Government?"

"None," he exclaimed.

"Then why not follow your example," I inquired, "and give us the fruits for which we fought?"

"Simply," said he, "because you of the North—I rather mean your Administration—made a wrong start when the war ended. If vigorous means of reconstruction had been put in force when the Confederate armies surrendered, there would be no obstructionists now. It was the dallying policy of ANDREW JOHNSON, tolerated too long by your people, that fed the spirit of the South with false hopes of recovering the supremacy they had lost, and while these false hopes prevailed, it required no small amount of moral courage to take the stand that I did. Up to the 3d of last November this same delusion existed, and had SEYMOUR and BLAIR had been elected, good-bye to peace and reconstruction at the South.

"But GRANT will set all things right down there," I observed.

"Yes," he responded, "the entire sensible mass of the Southern people secretly rejoice at GRANT'S election. I myself am growing in favor with them every day, which is an excellent sign, and but for the infernal tyranny of politicians, who will hold on as long as a breath of popularity remains to the most fossilized or exploded political theories, my ranks would be more largely recruited."

"General, I presume you have seen GRANT since you arrived in Washington?" I asked.

"Oh, yes," he answered, with a smile of pleasant recollection, "we dined together. We talked over our battles, and had a very agreeable evening."

"What opinion did you form of GRANT?" I modestly inquired.

"Very favorable indeed," he returned. "GRANT to my mind is the beau ideal of a soldier's companion. To explain this to you I might lay it down as a rule that a soldier detests long sentences of rhetoric,—he prefers a short, nimble mode of expression, and likes a man of general information who is not a bore. GRANT has not read very extensively, but it is amazing how clear and precise he is on every subject. His mind would appear to flash acros a question like lightning over the wire, and then after a brief pause he gives you his opinion in the simplest words, but in the tersest form. It is all a mistake about his reticence. In public he is taciturn, but meet him, as I did, in social conversation, and under the convivial cloud of a cigar, and no man living can be more entertaining than GRANT; at least to my mind it appeared so, and I had no favors to ask. GRANT thinks deeply, but talks little on what he meditates most. You will find him develop his policy, and be assured it will be a grand one, in detail, as a general develops his plan of battle. Under his Administration this country will take a bound forward and achieve a degree of prosperity beyond our most sanguine expectations."

"I begin to think, General," said I, as we were drawing near the Capitol gates, "that you and Gen. GRANT must have had a talking over your old campaigns in Mexico, and looking into the horoscope of that country's destiny."

"Well, I confess," he replied, "we did talk a little about Monterey and Chapultepec, but I can't positively say if he looked into the horoscope, though I know I did. It has been an old dream of mine that Mexico is bound to be ours, and I hope before I die to pitch my tent somewhere in her pleasant valleys."

TEXAS.

The Preservation of Peace—Order by Gen. Canby.

Gen. CANBY has issued an order dividing the State of Texas into districts or posts, to each of which a commander with a sufficient military force is assigned. This is done to secure a prompt and faithful execution of the laws, and to give to all persons full protection in their rights in cases where the civil authorities fail to give such protection, and to insure the speedy suppression of insurrection, disorder and violence. In cases of insurrections, &c., post commanders are invested with all the powers of the sheriffs, constables, marshals and police officers, and for the protection of individuals the commanders are invested with all the powers of county justices and police magistrates of city.

The commanders are instructed to report promptly each case in which they have taken jurisdiction, with such full statements as will enable the Commanding-General to determine whether persons held for trial should be brought before a military tribunal or a civil court. Citizens committed for trial are entitled to bail upon good and sufficient sureties, provided the offence with which they are charged is bailable under the laws of the State.

The commanders are instructed to act, as far as possible, by and through the civil authorities, giving them their support and all needful assistance, and they are directed not to interfere with the ordinary course of procedure unless these authorities refuse or fail to act, or unless there be satisfactory evidence that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the civil Courts. Gen. CANBY says:

"The laws of this State in relation to the prevention of crime and the arrest of criminals are comprehensive and explicit. The duties of magistrates and peace officers are clearly defined, and the powers of both are ample. These powers must be fully exercised whenever it is necessary for the preservation of order or the enforcement of the law. In this the civil will be supported and aided by the military authority; but the duties assigned to the post commander must not be construed as in any way relieving the civil officers from the full and exact performance of all the duties devolved upon them by the laws of the State. The Commanding-General hopes that all good citizens will unite in giving the officers of the State such moral support; and, when necessary, such physical aid as will not only secure the enforcement of the law and avoid the necessity for military interference, but give to all that sense of security in their rights of person and property which is so essential to the preservation of quiet and order and the material prosperity of any community."

A. H. Stephens' Advice to Southern Youth.

From the Augusta (Ga.) Press, Jan. 30.

Hon. A. H. STEPHENS was in conversation with the family of a friend in Warren County, when the sudden misfortunes and reduction to poverty of many young Georgians became the subject of discussion. Abandoning the State, and other remedies, were suggested, to all of which Mr. STEPHENS replied by advising all to stick to old Georgia, and declared, with that eloquent emphasis for which he is noted: "If these young gentlemen will labor as hard as I did when a young man success will crown their efforts."

A Battle Only Half Won.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Thursday, Jan. 28, 1869.

Editors Montgomery Advertiser:

GENTLEMEN: I have lately had much more notoriety than has been agreeable to me, and I would not now intrude upon the public notice from considerations personal only to myself, but I cannot consent for a distinguished fellow-citizen to be misrepresented in any effort to exonerate me. Judge RICE has not attempted to inveigle me—an unsuspecting rustic youth—by artfully employing

"The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To entrap the wisest."

He has only displayed the high qualities of gentlemanly courtesy and personal kindness His letter was presented to me at night on the railroad, and was hurriedly read in a very imperfect light, but I do not suppose that, even under such circumstances, I should have mistaken its purport if I had not been satisfied, from a previous conversation with its author, that its position in regard to the status of negro suffrage in Alabama was one of acquiescence rather than approval.

When my letter to Judge RICE was written I had not so much as heard of the "Third Party Movement," and my declaration of a determination to give National and State Administrations "a fair trial" was but the expression of a long settled conviction that the true policy of Democrats is quietly to acquiesce in the present condition of affairs, until some issue is presented on which they can successfully go before the country. If no such issue is ever presented—if the administrations of President GRANT and Gov. SMITH should be just and patriotic, it would certainly furnish the most satisfactory occasion of universal rejoicing; but, if, on the contrary, a noble patriotism, rising superior to party, discovers in these administrations hurtful innovations, inquitous legislation, and infernal combinations against the liberties and honor of our people, it will be our imperative duty to oppose them with all the energies we possess.

Very respectfully,

C. A. BATTLE.

A Strange Story of Courtship and Betrothal.

Treatment of a Young Girl.

From the Columbus (Ohio) Statesman, Feb. 2.

Last Friday a girl about fourteen years of age, named SARAH VAN SICKLE, from Perry County, we are informed, came to this city from Groveport. She is a rather good-looking little thing, entirely ignorant of the ways and vices of the world, believing implicitly whatever is told her, and says she is an orphan. She came here in search of employment. Shortly after her arrival she was made the subject of a series of outrages unequaled in the history of this city. A man, under pretence of engaging her to wait on his sick wife, took her to a house of ill-fame, from which, because she refused to prostitute herself, she was driven out. She was then taken to another house of the same character, the keeper of which, to her praise be it said, became her friend and advised her to leave that neighborhood. Again she was on the streets homeless and friendless and unknown. But she was followed by a party of ruffians who were determined on her ruin. One of these met her in the street and engaged her to work for him in the country. When they had got about a mile from the city this thing in man's shape assaulted her and attempted to outrage her person. But she fought him like a heroine, and her cries bringing relief, she was rescued and brought to this city. This was on Sunday. The gentleman to whom she artlessly related her story advised her to enter a complaint against the woman who first harbored her; and she did so. At her request she was provided with lodgings by the calaboose until yesterday morning.

Yesterday two men accosted her on the street, said they had heard her story and wished to befriend her. They had found a home for her, they said, and she believed them. They took her out South Public-lane to a piece of woods east of the graveyard, and there these two ruffians again attempted her ravishment. Her cries brought a German to her rescue, and on his getting over the fence he saw her bleeding at the nose and mouth, and one of the villains attempting to force a handkerchief in her mouth to stop her cries. The other turned upon the German and threatened to kill him if he did not leave. Frightened, he ran off, and got assistance. When he returned the men and girl were gone, and no signs were found of them. Shortly afterward she went to the house of Lieut. BUSH, of the City Police, and stated that she escaped from the men just after the German went away. At her request she was sent to the county infirmary to pass last night, and measures will be taken this morning to get her with the Sisters of the Good Shepherd.

Rights of Railroad Passengers.

We have already stated that the suit of Judge GODDARD, of Maine, against the Grand Trunk Railroad Company was decided in Portland on Tuesday, the jury awarding him $4,850 damages. The Portland papers give the facts of the case as follows:

Judge GODDARD purchased a ticket to Danville Junction and started to visit his family, then residing in Auburn. The afternoon train was very long, and, as usual, one JACKSON was detailed to take the tickets of passengers leaving the train before Mr. WHITNEY, the regular conductor, came through. Judge GODDARD, having some business with Farmington, stepped out, and at the request of JACKSON, handed him his ticket. Upon his return, JACKSON again approached where he was sitting and demanded his ticket, and upon Judge GODDARD'S replying that he gave it to him when he left the car, told the Judge that he lied, and calling into an ungovernable passion, commitied an assault upon him, shaking his fists in his face, threatening to beat his brains out, and using the most threatening language. He continued this for some twenty minutes, when the train approached Cumberland and he desisted.

It was admitted by Mr. BARNES, the Company's solicitor, that an assault of the most wanton, brutal and outrageous type had been perpetrated by one of their servants on a peaceable passenger who had paid his fare, and was sitting quietly in their car and under their protection, and that, too, without provocation; neither was it denied that JACKSON was authorized to demand and receive tickets in WHITNEY'S absence. But he contended that the Company was not liable for the assault, because they had not authorized it and had no knowledge of it until after it was over. It was a mere private affair between Judge GODDARD and HIRAM JACKSON, only that and nothing more, argued Mr. BARNES with much ingenuity and ability.

Upon this point the Court instructed the jury that if JACKSON made the assault from motives of private ill-will and revenge, the defendant Company could not be liable; but if, at the time of the assault, he was authorized to demand and receive the plaintiff's ticket, having demanded and received it, he pursued the plaintiff into the car under the pretence that the ticket had not been surrendered; intended to exercise his authority to ascertain whether or not the plaintiff had surrendered his ticket, or was attempting fraudulently to ride in the cars without paying his fare, and in so doing permitted himself to become excited, and made the assault described by the plaintiff and his witness, he (JACKSON) would be acting in the course of his employment so as to make the defendant Company liable, and that the plaintiff would be entitled to recover not only such damages as would be sufficient to compensate for the injuries thus inflicted upon him, but such further punitory damages as would serve for an example and tend to protect travelers against similar assaults in the future.

The Newburyport "Fire-Bug."

From the Boston Advertiser, Feb. 4.

By this entomological name the citizens of Newburyport are wont to speak of the incendiary who for the past two years or more has disturbed their peace and eluded all attempts to detect him. His activity during the present winter has been greater than ever, but the damage he has occasioned has not thus far corresponded with the frequency and persistency of his attempts to do mischief. The method employed by the incendiary is novel. His kindling apparatus consists of a wooden box, about four inches square and fifteen inches long, with covered top and bottom, lined at the top and sides with tin, and having on one side, near the bottom, a hole for the fire to issue from. This box is in which is placed, surrounded at the bottom with combustible materials, saturated with inflammable oil. When the candle has burned so low that these materials are ignited, the flame issues from the aperture in the box, and comes in contact with the woodwork of the building which has previously been saturated with oil. Generally the box is placed against the outside of the building intended to be destroyed; but when access is easily obtained, it is placed upon the inside. It is supposed that the incendiary comes forth with his box at about 6 o'clock in the evening, when the factory operatives are going to their homes, and he can pass most easily without observation; and the time required for his infernal machine to take effect varies with the condition of the atmosphere, the direction of the wind, or some other circumstance whose effect he cannot always closely calculate. The first of these boxes secured by the city authorities was found on the night of Dec. 15, 1867. Since that date, nearly a dozen of them, in various stages of combustion, have been placed in the office of Mr. FITZ, the City Marshal; and the number entirely consumed is probably as large as those discovered in season to be saved. These boxes are all similar in shape, are made of the same kind of materials, and their skillful construction shows that they are the work of a practiced hand.

American Social Science Association.

From the Albany Journal, Feb. 5.

The Association was organized in the Fall of 1865, and has for its purposes "the advancement of education, the prevention and repression of crime; the reformation of criminals, and the furtherance of public morality; the adoption of sanitary regulations, and the diffusion of sound principles on questions of economy, trade and finance." These objects are comprehensive and important. A general meeting of the Association will be held at the Agricultural Hall, in this city, on the 17th and 18th instant. At the first session, on the evening of the 17th, there will be an opening Address by the Chairman of the Albany Committee, JOHN MEREDITH READ, JR., and during the session several papers on topics now agitating the public mind, will be read by eminent gentlemen. The following are their titles: "Address on the work of the Association," by the President, SAMUEL ELIOT, LL. D.; a paper on "University Education," by Prof. GOLDWIN SMITH; a paper on "The Cattle Disease Commission," by Hon. JOHN STANTON GOULD; a paper on "The Supervision of Public Charities," by F. B. SANBORN; a paper on "Model Lodging-houses," by CHARLES L. BRACE; an address, by Hon. HORACE GREELEY; a paper on "Protection of the Ballot," by CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, JR., and a paper on "Higher Education," by the President of the Association. This meeting will attract many of the most learned scholars and profound thinkers of our nation, who will receive a cordial welcome by our citizens.

The Merchants' National Bank of Little Rock.

From the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette, Jan. 29.

Quite an excitement occurred in financial circles yesterday over the closing of the Merchants' National Bank, in this city, and the suspension of payments. The liabilities of the bank, that is the amount due to individual and Government depositors, is $436,000: of that amount about $175,000 is due to individuals. The Cashier of the bank is confident of being able to resume payments within fourteen days. It is certainly to be hoped that his expectations will be realized, for in many instances it is the depositors' all,

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The King of Greece has been unable to form a new Cabinet, and has recalled his old Prime Minister.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. GUINNESS, a member of Parliament from Dublin, has been unseated.

The Pope has forbidden the Prelates in Spain, who were elected to the Constitutional Cortes, to take seats in that body.

France promises to make speedy payment of one instalment of the Mexican debt.

CONGRESS.

The Senate, yesterday, after disposing of some miscellaneous business, took up the bill to repeal the Tenure-of-Office law. Mr. EDMUNDS explained that the bill as passed by the House proposed to remove all legal restrictions from the President in regard to appointments to and removals from office, but the Senate Judiciary Committee had proposed an amendment authorizing the President to suspend civil officers at will subject to the approval of the Senate, and also empowering the President to remove the heads of departments. Mr. MORTON spoke in favor of a total repeal of the law. Mr. THAYER and several others favored its repeal, while the restrictions imposed by the Senate amendment were advocated by others. The debate was terminated by the expiration of the morning hour, when the Constitutional Amendment came up as unfinished business. Mr. DAVIS, who was entitled to the floor, being too weak to speak, Mr. DOOLITTLE addressed the Senate in opposition to the proposed amendment. Mr. BAYARD followed on the same side of the question. Mr. HOWARD, from the Pacific Railroad Committee, reported what is known as the Pacific Railroad Omnibus bill. It was ordered printed. A resolution relative to counting the electoral vote of Georgia was ordered printed, as was also one in regard to the assault committed, on Friday, by Mr. DEMPSEY on Gen. DUNCAN, a clerk in the Patent Office. After some further debate on the Constitutional Amendment, the Senate adjourned.

In the House a number of private bills were reported from Committees and variously acted upon. Mr. HOOPER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill to prevent the further increase of the public debt, and asked that it be printed, as he should call it up next week. It will be found in full in our regular Congressional report. A resolution was adopted asking the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the House whether all moneys arising from the sales of captured and abandoned property had been covered into the Treasury. The House, in Committee of the Whole, resumed debate on the Army Appropriation bill. Mr. BLAINE announced that in accordance with the sentiment expressed by the House on Friday, the Committee had submitted amendments which would reduce the appropriation $10,000,000. During the debate the action of Secretary STANTON in taking possession of Ford's Theatre, immediately after the assassination of President LINCOLN, was denounced by Mr. ELDRIDGE and defended by Mr. BLAINE. Various amendments to the bill were then offered and debated, but without disposing of it the Committee rose. The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment contemplating the reduction of the army by 10,000 men. The House then adjourned.

GENERAL.

The excitement created at Fishkill Plains by the sudden death of some cattle has subsided, it having been discovered that they were poisoned, and were not victims of the cattle disease.

An attempt was made on Thursday night to set fire to the Children's Home at Lancaster, Penn. One of the inmates, a girl aged fourteen years, yesterday confessed to having done the deed, and also to having made a similiar attempt ten days since.

Mr. GALUSHA A. GROW, who was injured a day or two since by a railroad accident on the Bloomsburg Railroad, has reached his home, and his injuries are pronounced not to be of a serious character. He was standing by the stove at the time of the accident, when the car was thrown from the track and rolled down an embankment. His clothing was nearly all burned from his body.

FRANCIS TOHLER, one of Pike's Opera troupe, was yesterday sentenced, by Justice DOWLING, in Special Sessions, to one month's imprisonment, and to pay a fine of $50, for assaulting ADOLPH BIRGFELD, the manager of the Company.

Great religious excitement prevails among the different denominations in Buffalo. Dr. and Mrs. PALMER, of this City, preach nightly to crowded audiences at the Pearl-street Methodist Church. A large number of converts have been made.

Representatives ARNELL, MULLINS and NUNN, of Tennessee, in a card, denounce as willful and malicious falsehoods the publications which connect them in any way with the School Fund fraud in that State.

The Governor and Legislature of Nevada are working in a most inharmonious manner. The Governor vetoed the Legislative Fund bill, the Legislature passed the bill over the veto, and now the Governor is striving to obtain an order restraining the Comptroller from paying the warrants drawn on him in accordance with the bill. In return the Legislature threatens the Governor with impeachment.

Right Reverend IGNATIUS MRAK, D. D., is to be consecrated Bishop of Marquette and Saulte Ste. Marie to-day at the Roman Catholic Cathedral in Cincinnati. Archbishop PURCELL, who will conduct the services, will be assisted by Rev. Dr. LEFEVRE, Bishop of Detroit, and Rev. Dr. LUERS, Bishop of Fort Wayne Diocese. The sermon will be preached by Rev. F. X. WENINGER, S. J.

Deputy United States Marshal DONALDSON, of Utica, last week arrested JACOB STEINER, JOSEPH AVERY, NICHOLAS STUFFERS and NICHOLAS PORT, on the charge of running an illicit distillery in the woods in Lewis County, and, after an examination before Commissioner BOYCE, all four were held to bail in the sum of $500 each. They procured bail, save Mr. PORT, who, in default, went to jail. The whisky mill was found hidden beneath the floor of PORT's cabin.

GEORGE C. MORTON, agent of Adams' Express Company, at Ridgely, Md., on the line of the Delaware Railroad, is reported to have absconded a few days since with $2,100, intrusted to the Company by various parties for transportation.

The Hiawatha House and a frame building adjoining in McKeesport, Penn., were destroyed by fire on Friday morning.

The Circuit Court and Court of Oyer and Terminer will meet in Troy to-morrow, Judge HOGEBOOM presiding, and it is understood that the trial of JOEL B. THOMPSON, for the murder of THOMAS H. BAILEY, will be moved on Tuesday morning by District-Attorney BARKER. The trial will occupy several days, and it is understood that both sides have some witnesses who have not appeared at all in the case, to whose evidence much importance is attached. It will be a hard fight between the counsel, the list of whom embraces several prominent gentlemen.

A dispatch from Havana gives the latest news from St. Domingo. SALNAVE recently attacked and destroyed the town of Torbeck. He also bombarded and destroyed Port Salut, and captured the town of Aquim. The residents of Aux Cayes were very much frightened, and many of them fled to Jamaica.

Several years ago a young man in Milford, Mass., was divorced from his wife, who had previously borne a good reputation. She went away, engaged in an honorable employment, and returned recently with $1,000 saved from her earnings, which she offered to give him if he would forgive her. He accepted, and they have just been remarried.

The fall of the roof of St. Patrick's Hall, in Montreal, recently, was due to the mass of snow accumulated upon it during the late severe storm. Yesterday, the roof covering two new and unoccupied stores in the same city gave way from the same cause, carrying away four floors, clean to the cellar. Nothing but the bare walls of the building remain.

Mrs. LEONARD, an insane woman who was confined in the jail at Flint, Mich., set her clothes on fire Friday night, and was burned to death.

A fire broke out in one of the collieries of the Short Mountain Coal Company, above Millersburg, Pennsylvania, recently, but was temporarily kept in check until a force-pump and a sufficient quantity of hose arrived from Harrisburg, on Thursday, by means of which it is thought the burning mass of coal can effectually be quenched.

Gen. GRANT was yesterday visited by a large number of prominent persons, and by politicians without number. To their great disappointment he was absent from his hotel all the morning. In the afternoon he received the Lincoln Club and a delegation from the Republican Central Committee. In the evening he attended a dinner party given by Hon. HAMILTON FISH.

Yesterday, the jury in the Supreme Court Circuit, rendered a verdict for $35,000 damages against the Erie Railroad Company, in favor of CAMDEN C. DIKE, for injuries inflicted by the Port Jervis disaster.

Several fires occurred yesterday in the City. The principal fire took place at No. 16 Mulberry-street, a large building occupied as a picture-frame and moulding manufactory, and before the flames could be extinguished a loss of $140,000 had been inflicted.

The Committee having charge of the investigation into contested Assembly elections, resumed its sittings, yesterday, at the Metropolitan Hotel, and listened to a considerable amount of testimony on both sides of several cases.

Additional testimony was taken yesterday by Justice DOWLING, in the Pacific Railroad bond case, after which an adjournment until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning was ordered.

FREDERICK BADEN and JOSEPH ROLL were yesterday convicted in the Court of General Sessions, of arson, and were sentenced to serve for ten years each in State Prison.

In this City, last week, there were 461 deaths, 204 marriages, and 335 births, according to official registry.

The Bremen bark America, which arrived here on Friday last, rescued the crew of the bark Cuthbert, and also that of the Hibernia, on the voyage hither, and landed them at the Azores.

Are We to be Cast Off?

There was a discussion in the State Legislature last week in reference to the government of New-York City. It hinged upon the "Commissions" that have been established by the State for the administration of City affairs—the Police, Health, Charity, Park, and so forth. Mr. KIERNAN argued that this mode of governing the City was injurious, costly and anti-Republican; while Mr. LA BAU showed that the welfare of the City required that its management should be kept as far as possible out of the control of the corrupt municipal authorities. Our Albany correspondent, in reporting the debate, says that the rural members of the Legislature "have got tired of being bored to death" every Winter about our City affairs, and that there is a growing sentiment among them in favor of abolishing the whole system of Commissions and "leaving New-York to go to the devil."

We are, of course, in favor of the Commissions, and we entreat the rural members not to be over hasty in depriving us of the advantages we enjoy under them. Their management of affairs is, on the whole, better than we had before their existence; and we are sure that after we have secured some reform in those that need it, we will be still more benefited by their continuance in power.

But at the same time, we would not have the country members to suffer the misery of being "bored to death" in order to save the City from "going to the devil." We have an idea that if the worst came to the wrost, and if the people here were driven to their own wits to find the agencies of self-government, they might possibly discover some means of salvation. We have an immense preponderance of respectable people in New-York. The trouble is that they are apathetic about the public interests, and do not take hold and control public affairs as they might very easily do. They are intent, each for himself, in private business affairs, in making money and spending it, in working, accumulating and wasting. There are here such splendid advantages in commerce, business and exchange, such unequaled opportunities of acquisition and enjoyment, that they cannot be induced to pay attention to the government of the municipality and the management of its great public interests. Were they to give a little attention to these,—were a small part of the energy and talent devoted to private ends to be turned to municipal administration, we should neither hear of imbecility nor corruption, and should be able to dispense entirely with the aid, in the way of government, that we receive from the rural members of the Legislature. It is because we have found it impossible to get the business men and the working men of the City to do their duty in these matters, that we have been compelled to resort to the discreditable expedient of asking the assistance of the State Legislature in the administration of our municipal affairs.

We have not much hope of stirring up our respectable classes to take a genuine interest in the City's affairs. For years we argued with them; and though things went from bad to worse, though corruption followed ruinous waste, and expenditures were piled up annually by millions, they remained in indifference. They gave the control to the lowest order of professional politicians, and surrendered their rights to those who had the least interest in the welfare of the City. How to bring them up to their duties, we are at a loss to know. But if by any means they could be stirred up, it would be by the rural members resolving in their wrath that the City should be "sent to the devil." For, in that case, the City might possibly determine not to obey, and so set about relieving itself from the disgrace which has always covered is local Government.

The New Professions—Need of Museums of Science.

The recent Governor of Massachusetts, in his valedictory address to the Legislature, made the following remarks on a subject, which is also of great importance to this State:

"Since a period so recent as to be within the remembrance of all of us, the line of distinction between what were called the learned professions and the other avocations of society have been in great measure effaced; or, perhaps I should rather say, various other avocations have come to share with these professions a degree of responsibility for the common welfare such as was not formerly recognized. With the development of manufactures and mines, of commerce, of railroads and telegraphs, a higher capacity to command, a clearer discretion in its exercise, and a more extensive education for its duties have become necessary. The various establishments of instruction in the natural sciences, (of which the Museum of Comparative Zoölogy is the most conspicuous,) owe their development to this cause; and, in turn, they themselves foster and promote the very cause in which they had their origin. To conduct successfully almost any great manufacturing establishment to-day, requires from young men the practical application of a degree of scientific knowledge, which fifty years ago was possessed only by a few, and was acquired by them only as the result of long lives of study. And the same may be said concerning many other employments of our time.

The institute of Technology, at Boston, to whose funds the State has largely contributed, the Lawrence Scientific School at Cambridge, and the Worcester School of Industrial Science, founded on a liberal scale by private munificence, are landmarks in the same line of progress. Although the first of these has been in operation less than three years, its influence is already felt by the whole community."

In the succeeding portions of his able address, Gov. BULLOCK shows the invaluable services rendered to the State by the Institute of Technology, the Museum of Comparative Zoölogy and the labors of Prof. AGASSIZ in the field of natural science.

There is no State which needs the best instruction in natural science, and popular aids for the study of this branch, so much as New-York. This City has become a vast manufacturing City. Manufactures of every description are extending into all the suburban districts; the professions are crowded and the natural tastes of our youth do not run toward collegiate and classical studies. There is a continual call for skilled young men in all mechanical arts—without sufficient supply—and this City is a kind of centre of the demand for the best-trained scientific heads in all practical departments. Here accumulates the capital which opens mines, builds railroads, starts new branches of manufacture and sustains inventions—and here must come the men who would manage the scientific departments of all these enterprises.

The old idea that there are just three professions for every youth starting in his career, or that every boy who is not suited for business must go to college, is pretty much exploded. As Gov. BULLOCK says, new professions of immense importance and of great attraction to the young are now being opened. The superintendence of mines, the application of science to practical life in the arts and in useful and ornamental inventions; the necessary researches in soils, rocks and minerals, which must precede important outlays of capital; the scientific branches of manufacture, and the artistic laying out of public and private grounds, form an almost entirely new field of labor for young men. They are branches, too, which command high salaries, and some of them of a somewhat free and adventurous cast. Many boys are fitted for them who are not in the least adapted for commerce, business or the professions. Looked at also purely in an intellectual view, these branches stand now on a level with the old professions. Science leads the van of intellectual progress in this age. The most prominent intellects of the day are not the classical scholars or the lights of the pulpit and the bar; they are the great investigators in the field of natural science, the students of social and political economy, and those who have learned to apply the laws of nature to practical uses.

How does New-York satisfy this great tendency of the age? How does the commercial capital of the Union meet the demands of science? What have we here to train up our young men for these new professions, or even to give the masses who rule us the first rudiments of natural science?

We have indeed some sixpenny museums for children; a medley of animals in an old arsenal in the Park; some utterly unknown collections in the cellars of learned societies, and one small "School of Mines" in Columbia College. Beyond these we possess absolutely nothing, so far as we can recall. No Institute of Technology or Museum of Zoölogy, as in Boston, or Scientific School, as in Cambridge; certainly nothing like the Zoölogical Gardens, or South Kensington Museum, or British Museum of London, or the hundreds which might be mentioned in Paris and Berlin and Vienna and other continental cities.

With the enormous wealth concentrated here, and the vast demand for such facilities and means of popular education, our condition in this respect is simply disgraceful. There is not, with the exception of the "School of Mines," a single institution of this nature which is beyond what might be required in a second-rate Western village.

Our youth who have the honorable ambition to cut out new lines of advance for themselves, who have no talent for business, and do not like either law, medicine or theology as a profession, must go to Boston or New-Haven or Germany to fit themselves for the new professions. Our common people have no place in which they can study machinery, or animal life, or plants, or the structure of the earth, or any of the great facts in natural history. What more valuable thing for the culture and good habits of the masses could there be than such collections as are at Kew, or the South Kensington Museum, the Zoölogical Gardens and Crystal Palace of London? Why should Democracy be so much behind Aristocracy in the means of cultivating the masses?

The great results which Gov. BULLOCK pictures in Massachusetts, in the formation of popular institutions for natural science, have only been brought about by a liberal appropriation by individuals of private wealth.

It is mainly private benefactions of wealthy citizens which have founded these most useful schools and museums. Is there not private wealth enough in New-York which will do as much for this City?

America's Greatest Necessity—Mothers.

NAPOLEON once gave great offence to that highly intellectual but decidedly cold beauty, Mme. DE STAEL, by replying to her rather leading question as to whom he thought the first woman of France—"the one with the most children." Subsequently, the same NAPOLEON, discussing a new conscription with his Ministers, astonished that body of grave and reverend seigneurs by declaring that the great necessity of France was mothers. The same idea in regard to the like necessity in this country lately found characteristic expression in the remark of a Boston literary lady to a New-York friend who had asked her why the Bostonians never gave public balls for children, as is the custom in New-York. "Ah, my dear," was the reply, "you know we never have any children in Boston."

Nor, for that matter, in any part of New-England or the Middle States. It appears by the latest statistics that the native population of the most populous part of the United States is rapidly dying out! It is only the foreign-born part of the population which is increasing. The birth-rate of New-England and the Middle States is less than that of France at the present time, and not half as great as that of France when NAPOLEON irritably complained of the mothers for their failure to produce conscripts whom he might use as food for powder. For years the population of France has been at a standstill, though the birth-rate was one birth to thirty-seven of the population. The birth-rate of the native Americans in New-England and the Middle States is only one in fifty persons of the native population, while the death-rate is one in fifty-four of all the population, or at least one in forty of the native population. Thus the natives are dying out faster than they are born.

We are straining every nerve to fill up the country by emigration; every inducement is held out to foreigners to populate our vast region; and the children of foreigners, as well as foreign-born persons, are rapidly increasing every year. The Germans and the Irish are among the most prolific of nations; and it is a singular and important fact that their progeny are increasing in this country at a greater ratio than in their native lands. The birth-rate of Prussia and Austria is one in twenty-six, while the birth-rate among the Germans in this country is estimated at one in twenty of our German population. The Irish are equally prolific, and it is an undeniable fact that the increase in population in the Middle and New-England States is confined exclusively to these foreign races. It is only these foreigners among our population who are indelicate, unrefined and unfashionable enough to have large families. Your true American woman is never guilty of such indelicacy—at least not of late years. There are records of the existence of large families of ten and even twenty children, but they thrived long years ago, before corset strings were invented and small waists became fashionable, and long before the pernicious doctrines of MALTHUS were propounded.

New-York is perhaps more deficient than any other State in the Union in the matter of mothers. The State census of 1865 has some curious revelations on this subject, pointing to the undeniable fact, as the compiler says, that there is no increase of the native Knickerbockers. It appears that only about one-third of the females in the State were or had been married, and of these (842,562) one-fourth (196,802) at that time had no children, and one-seventh (115,253) of the married ones not only had none living, but had never had any at all, and did not expect or intend ever to have any. The remaining three-fourths of these 800,000 married couples had succeeded in producing only an average of 1 1-7 children; and the greatest proportion of these few births were among the foreign families. In other words, the American married women who bore children at all averaged only one; those who were married averaged only three-fourths of a child to the family; and it required ten females out of the whole sex in the State to produce one child! It is encouraging to note that on this blessed Island of Manhattan 965 American mothers, with truly Roman fortitude and devotion to country, gave birth to 9,650 young Americans; but their glory was overshadowed by the remarkably unfashionable proceedings of 2,850 Teutonic and Hibernian dames, who gave existence to 28,500 young foreigners!

We are dying out, we native Americans. The combined testimony of City, State and national census reports testifies to the alarming fact, and the question is what is to be done about it?

The number of marriages has largely decreased in the past few years. In all the States alluded to the females of a marriageable age are at least a quarter of a million in excess of the men of the same age, and the number of those willing, but unable, to become mothers is annually increasing. At the same time infanticide is largely increasing; the crime is becoming one of painful frequency; and a certain species of it is practiced in the first families, and the drugs and implements for committing such murders are publicly sold everywhere. How to preserve her looks, and how not to have children, seem really to be the chief thoughts of women nowadays. The domestic economists have suggested the expensiveness of the married state as another cause for the decrease of marriages and births; and the physiologists have mentioned the neglect of physical exercise and wrong fashions as another. Maternity has also become most unfashionable of late years; and this idea, trivial as it may appear, is the cause of the murder of many innocents.

The causes are many, and easily enumerated, but who will suggest a remedy, and save the great American nation from utter annihilation?

What is Poverty?—The Refractory Witness.

At last accounts from Washington, Mr. FLORENCE SCANNEL, better known, perhaps, to history as "the Refractory Witness," had been remanded by a hard-hearted House to his "dungeon," where he continues in the custody of the Capitol Police. This, too, despite three or four days' debate expended on his case, and pathetic as well as skillful appeals for FLORENCE, made by Mr. BROOKS. "Pity the sorrows of a poor"—refractory witness.

Whatever the merits may be of the Refractory Witness' case, it is clear from the House debate upon it, that "poverty" is a relative, not an absolute condition of life. The costs for which the Refractory Witness is held in duress, amount to the not very hopeless sum of $75. Yet Mr. FERNANDO WOOD and Mr. BROOKS give us to understand that this sum would not only utterly bankrupt Mr. SCANNEL, but that it already so utterly swamps his credit that "insisting on the payment of his fine is tantamount to his incarceration during this Congress." Very clearly, a cruel Congress is "grinding the face of the poor."

On the other hand, however, Mr. LAWRENCE has shown that Mr. SCANNEL has been a member of the Common Council of the City of New-York—and that he can't have retired from that position in a state of absolute destitution; Mr. KELLEY has shown that Mr. SCANNEL had no difficulty in paying his bill "for going to PhIladelphia and voting at the October election, for which offence he stood indicted;" a third suggestion has been that Mr. SCANNEL should "mortgage his trotting-horse, said to be worth $14,000;" and when, at last, rather driven into a corner, Mr. BROOKS alluded to the unfortunate SCANNEL as, if not a poor, "at least a plain workingman," Mr. DICKEY asks if "it is usual for plain workingmen in New-York to wear diamonds?" which inquiry was received with "great laughter."

What did Mr. BROOKS reply in defence of the twinkling Scannel shirt-front:

"Mr. BROOKS suggested that there were many cases of poor men in New York who had received presents of jewels from wealthy men for rescuing their sons from peril at sea, or on the field of battle, or in camp or hospital, and that the jewels obtained in that way were cherished more than were the stars or garters conferred as decorations in Europe. [Laughter.] He supposed that his constituent had been desirous of paying proper respect to the House by appearing in his best clothes."

Will the country credit that, after this full and satisfactory explanation of the Scannel diamonds, and the evidence they showed of the Scannel poverty, the House delivered the Refractory Witness again into custody? But that is the way of the world—

Laws grind the poor and rich men make the laws.

Nevertheless, we hold it to be clear that "poverty" is a relative term; and that, if SCANNEL, with his diamonds and race-horses is a "poor man," we must invent some other term for people of rags and crusts.

The Late English Elections—An Analysis of their Result.

The Tories have at length discovered what seems to them, apparently, a comforting point of view from which to regard the late general election in Great Britain. It is true that the Liberal majority of 74 in the late House of Commons was increased to 111, showing a Liberal gain of 37 votes on a division. But, say they, an analysis of the election returns shows the following results:

1. England gives a Conservative gain on a division of 5 votes and 2,167,000 population.
2. Wales, Scotland and Ireland give a Liberal gain on a division of 42 votes and 1,735,000 population.
3. The United Kingdom gives on a division a Liberal gain of 37 votes, but a Conservative gain of 430,000 population.

The population test is here applied by dividing the total population of a borough or county constituency by the number of members returned, and crediting each member with his proper share.

Consequently, although the result of the elections was to increase the Liberal majority from 74 to 111, the Tories take consolation from the thought that in England they have gained slightly in point of seats and largely in point of population, while their total loss in the United Kingdom was only nineteen seats, and their actual gain in population 430,000. No wonder that the Tories derive a certain amount of gratification from these statistics; and as far as the general result of the elections have been affected by the lowering of the suffrage qualification, they unquestionably have ground for doing so. The Reform bills of 1867 made greater changes, relatively speaking, in the electoral basis of representation in England, than in either Scotland or Ireland. The numbers added to the previously existing constituencies were far greater in England than in the remainder of the United Kingdom. And while the Tories have actually gained five seats only in England, the transfer of power to the masses has resulted in a gain to them of over 2,000,000 in population. The Liberals gained a sufficient number of seats in the smaller English constituencies to all but neutralize the Tory gain in the larger ones as far as the result on a division goes, but the Tories certainly can take credit for having demonstrated that in England, at least, their cause can neither be termed anti-popular nor unpopular.

But the strong and decisive Liberal movement in Scotland, Ireland and Wales not only gave the Liberals a gain in the elections of forty-two votes, but reduced the Tory gain in population to 430,000. The following table shows the local distribution of the gains and losses of the two parties:

	—Liberal Majority.—		—Gain on Div.—
	Old Parliament.	New Parliament.	Conservative.	Liberal.
Members.
England	31	26	5	..
Wales	5	14	..	9
Scotland	31	44	..	13
Ireland	7	27	..	20
Total	74	111	5	42
Net gain on a division				37

Now these figures are significant in the highest degree, and although from one point of view they may afford a certain kind of encouragement to the Tories, they also ring the death-knell of the Tory hopes of retaining power and upholding the monstrous injustice of the Irish Church by appealing to the Protestant bigotry of the people. Ireland, as might have been anticipated, pronounced in favor of the Ministry which pledges itself to do her justice. But in Scotland and Wales, it was confidently expected by the Tories that unreasoning Protestant hatred of Popery would outweigh both the natural sense of justice and the hostility which the bulk of the inhabitants of each country feel toward the Anglican Church Establishment. On this point, however, the Tories have been signally disappointed. Scotchmen of all denominations, and Welsh dissenters of all sects have joined with Irish Roman Catholics in demanding the abolition of the Irish Church. In the former country, indeed, if it had not been for the power of a few great Tory landlords, the entire delegation of between fifty and sixty members would have been Liberal. And yet no one can accuse Scotchmen of any indifference to the true interests of Protestantism. In Wales, too, where Protestant dissenters from the Anglican Church form the great majority of the population, the Liberals trebled their majority. Nothing, in fact, can be clearer than that the so-called defenders of the Church of England have in reality done her a grievous injury by dragging her into the political arena in the way they have done, and assuming, in her name, a position of hostility to a measure of justice so loudly demanded as that proposed by Mr. GLADSTONE with regard to the Irish Church. Not only have her self-styled friends forced her into an attitude opposed to the first principles of religious liberty and justice in Ireland, but they have also alienated the sympathies of large bodies of Protestants who have hitherto taken no active part against either her or the party usually identified with her interests. Whatever satisfaction the Tories may gather from their gains in England must be more than balanced by the thought that their attempt to enlist Protestant bodies outside the Church in favor of religious intolerance has proved an ignominious failure. The Anglican Church can ill afford at the present moment to draw upon herself the hostility of fellow-Protestants in Scotland and Wales, and yet the figures we have adduced unquestionably show that such has been the case, thanks to the misplaced zeal manifested in her behalf by Mr. DISRAELI and his political friends.

The Utah Bill—Its Aim and Operation.

The Utah bill, big with the fate of Mormondom, is again on the eve of discussion. How this measure will issue it is vain to prognosticate, more especially as it is now urged by its opponents that, while aiming a death-blow to organized polygamy, the bill also and inevitably deals a stroke at the general welfare of our Western Territories.

The proposition is undeniably a radical one; the question for grave consideration is whether, on the one hand, the Mormon malady does not demand radical treatment, and yet, on the other, whether a slip in legislation may not make the proposed remedy worse than the disease. We have already explained how Mr. ASHLEY's bill, in disrupting Dakota and dividing Utah, parcels out all the fragments of the former Territory and the chief part of the latter to contiguous States and Territories. It is a bold and literally "slashing" proposition, whose justification is rested on the ground, probably, that only by cutting down BRIGHAM YOUNG's dominions can you cure the pseudo-President of his proclivity for empire-founding.

On behalf of Mr. ASHLEY's bill it has been further asserted that it does not meddle with Mormon settlements, but only with untenanted domains—ripping off the waste corners of Deseret; and, accordingly, it is urged, the bill works no practical injustice to the Saints. But, on the other hand, we have since been assured, that this is not so; that a good part of the Mormon population is to be broken up among several States and Territories, with whatever loss or inconvenience that may entail upon them.

By this despoiling process, according to a correspondent of the TIMES, Minnesota is doubled from Dakota; Nebraska is patched with 20,000 square miles of Dakota; Wyoming is quadrupled in population (i. e. by Mormons,) as well as increased in area; Nevada is pieced out with a slice of 22,000 square miles from Utah, and 10,000 Mormon population; Montana is increased at the expense of Idaho; Colorado at that of Utah.

If it were necessary, in order to break up polygamy, Congress probably would not scruple to grind up Utah into pieces as small as Rhode Island or Delaware; and, in like manner, some apportionment of the fragments to neighboring Territories becomes necessary, in order to save the expense of half a dozen new Territorial Governments for petty domains. But some objections have been presented to this special mode of disposing of Utah, as well as to the whole theory of settling the Mormon problem in this way.

Thus, for example, it is claimed that this bill increases the area of Territories already too large. It cuts down Utah to a mere strip, though it contains, we should say, about 100,000 Mormon population alone, and wipes out Dakota; meanwhile, the enormous areas of Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska and Nevada are made larger yet—thus verifying the Scripture rule, "To him that hath shall be given; but to him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

By so increasing the size of six States and Territories, this bill apparently hastens the period when they will all have to be divided again, so doubling the expenses of Government for all of them. It has also been suggested that not only is their Judicial power everywhere weakened by the extent of area embraced within its purview, but the Executive and Legislative authorities will be less respected on distant borders, crime will be more frequent and facile, and Indian disorders and lawlessness certainly be increased.

Now, of these and similar suggestions, it will be noted that they are put on the ground—not of the hurt the bill will do Mormonism, but of the hurt it will do us. They relate to the particular mode of going to work under the provisions of the bill. It may, however, be possible to so modify the bill as to escape these criticisms, and avoid the dangers here pointed out.

It is undoubtedly a difficult problem to handle, from beginning to end. That some hardships will be inflicted on the Mormons by this, or almost any similar measure, is clear; and it is doubtless this reflection which has led some Congressmen to take the ground that the Pacific Railroad is the real "civilizer" for Mormons as well as Indians, and that, until its effect in pouring the Gentile element into Utah is tested, we can afford to pursue our laissez-faire policy a few years longer. However, we need not attempt to anticipate the elaborate discussion which the bill will probably soon call out.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The fashionable drawing-room pastime in Paris just now is called the Grimakisticope. It is a box containing all the celebrities of the day, into the features of any one of whom any visitor can with a touch impart any expression he likes, from the most awful grimaces that ever added ugliness to a monkey to the sweetest ever dreampt of by poet or artist. Thus ANDY JOHNSON can be reduced to the emaciated outline of a fasting monk; Secretary SEWARD can be made not to wink toward John Bull; Mr. CHASE or Gen. BURNSIDE can be had with a low forehead; Mr. GREELEY can have one eye pinched in and the other blind; FERNANDO WOOD can be had with a baggy waistcoat in front; and Messrs. FENTON and MORGAN can be had with contrition on their faces on account of the result of the Senatorial election. All these delightful and novel effects can be varied indefinitely; but it is said that no one who has ever been the victim of the Grimakisticope is likely to desire its popularity.

An apt illustration of the folly of "strikes," because of the ultimate injury which they inflict upon trade, is found in the precarious condition to which the coal traffic has been reduced in the Schuylkill and Shamokin regions of Pennsylvania, by the series of stoppages to which the miners have subjected the works for a year or so past. That great coal field, really larger and nearer to tide-water than the enterprising Lehigh, Wyoming and Scranton regions, though not so favored in regard to facilities of transportation, has been so often forced to idleness by the periodic demands of the miners for increased wages, that it has lost the control of the market which it ought to enjoy, and now hardly does more than supply the excess in the demand from those other regions. This is a precise parallel to the attitude of the book type-setters in New-York, who have succeeded in gradually driving away all the important book-making (so far as composition and casting are concerned) to the cheaper and quite as good labor of New-England.

The Carnival fashion of the Arions does not seem to thrive in the air of Manhattan. The masking and mumming, and the mixture of the grotesque mediæval allegories with the neck-or-nothing abandon of the Mabille is not yet acclimatized here, and probably may not be. Every age has its own fashions. Those of the good old times were very picturesque and hearty, among the gables of Ghent and Nurnberg; but, perhaps, it is better to praise them than to imitate them—particularly if the imitation is not a very happy one. People say the fun of our Arions was not so very funny. And then they would have their gay bayaderes in full opera fig, along with a daring little can-can, like one of the wicked "rings" in a corner—things which the sedate and circumspect found un peu trop fort, and so went off to bed. There is a moral in all this which the Arions will probably lay to heart—but, then, they may not—during the sobriety of the Lenten season.

The English are almost in despair over the frightful growth of crime and pauperism. Plans and remedies of all sorts are suggested, and the newspapers are filled with discussions on the subject. The forcible deportation of the lower classes by the Government is suggested, but the more this project is examined, the more does its impracticability appear. We can conceive of no greater problem for English statesmen, and we should think that some one would turn up with ability to devise, and power to carry out, the means of reform.

The public debt exhibit for Feb. 1 makes the net aggregate obligations of the Government $2,556,205,658, as against $2,540,707,205 a month previous, showing an increase, during January, of $16,498,453, chiefly the result of the extraordinarily heavy disbursements of the month, on the interest account. The coin-bearing portion of the debt shows no material variation, being now $2,107,850,050, against $2,107,835,350 on Jan. 1, an increase of only $14,700, and wholly in the five-twenty form. To the three per cent. currency certificates, an addition of $1,545,000 was made during the month; to the coin certificates, of $5,633,500; and to the United States currency six per cent. bonds, issued in aid of the Pacific Railroad enterprises, of $1,920,000. The matured obligations, not presented for payment, show a reduction of $552,567. The outstanding amount of fractional currency was enlarged $1,295,412. The aggregate cash balances of the Department were diminished $5,642,412. On the 1st of January the coin reserve was $98,763,389, of which $71,727,349 belonged to the Government; now the reserve is $88,732,716, of which $56,073,196 are in the ownership of the Treasury. The currency reserve is up to $17,441,382, as against $13,063,092 at the beginning of the year.

Among all the workers now "on strike" in this City, we know of none who have reason behind them but the seamen. These poor fellows not only have small wages and the hardest kind of work, but a good portion of their gettings go into the hands of those who neither employ nor help them—boarding-house keepers and shipping agents. The old enthusiasm of "Bethel Societies" and "Sailors' Friends," &c., which was in vogue about twenty-five years ago, might with great advantage be revived. The subject of sailors' life ashore and their wretched sufferings and losses in getting to sea again, is one which ought to be ventilated and made public. The evil is great and growing.

"Theatrical nudities" usurp the foremost place on the English stage nowadays, as they have of late years done on the American stage. The London Daily News has been protesting against the indecent appearance on the stage of young ladies all but completely undressed, whirling about so as to make completely undressed scarcely an exaggerated account of their condition, and of other female forms high up in the air, with hardly anything on them beyond the machinery by which they are suspended there. The power of a manager to draw crowded houses is in exact proportion to the number of parts he allots to females, the reriod of the piece being usually so selected that as much as possible of their forms may be presented in bold relief to the gaze of the spectators. The News does not think that woman was designed—or, if all talk about design is dropped, should be utilized—for the gratification of the less defensible tastes of man. One hears a good deal of woman's rights just now, but one really should have thought one of her elementary rights was that she should not be stripped naked for the public gaze—admission to the show cheap and easy.

Our New-York Chamber of Commerce is unlike that royal potentate who "never said a foolish thing and never did a wise one." It frequently does excellent deeds, and not seldom delivers itself of veritable Bunsbyism. Its agitation for the obstruction of the East River Bridge, a day or two since, seems of this character. The necessity for increased transit facility between New-York and Long Island is patent and pressing. The schemes for furnishing this are reduced to two; a long dock or solid quay, built up with warehouses, and either with or without a drawbridge—which demands more dollars and years than the public can afford; and a lofty suspension bridge, which is practicable and in a fair way to be erected. To check the bridge project now is to leave a great need unsupplied for years; it would be a criminal blunder.

Let's see, how many members are there in the honorable House of Representatives? Two hundred and forty-two, or thereabouts? We ask because we should like to know about how many schemes there are for tinkering the finances and clearing away the national debt. We wonder if all these gentlemen are as anxious to pay their individual debts, ten and twenty and thirty years before they are due? Or is it only on public promises-to-pay that they like to talk and be reported to the public? It is, no doubt, very generous and patriotic of them; but we are inappreciative enough to believe that if they will pay more attention to saving public expenditures now, the public debt will attend to itself when it is due.

The proposition that the Government should purchase the buildings of the City Hospital, (now for sale,) to be used for the purpose of the Post Office and the Courts, is a bad one. For such purposes the buildings are altogether inconvenient, and, worse still, their long employment for hospital purposes unfits them for use by healthy people. The eminent surgeon, Sir JAMES SIMPSON, has lately called attention to the fact, that the walls of hospitals—brick, stone, plaster—become in time so enfiltrated with the emanations of disease as to be dangerous to patients; and he gives figures to show that with the best skill and care of the great hospitals, three times as many patients die of operations as if they were attended at their homes, even where these would seem less salubrious. It is not a question of size or ventilation, for a new hospital is healthy; but in spite of all efforts at cleanliness, the building itself becomes diseased. Under these circumstances, there could be no greater folly than to convert the old hospital buildings into Post Office and Court-rooms.

In the midst of the general movement of the workers, in assertion of their rights, the cartmen have been coming together with a grievance of their own, which they are determined to abate and dissolve. That grievance is BERGH—Mr. BERGH, the philanthropist. They cannot go about in safety with him—especially in snowy or frosty weather, when he comes down upon them from the sidewalk and aggravates the evil condition of the street. They have got up a Finance Committee to "bell the cat"—that is, get funds to fight him in Court, if he should pull up any more of them. The cartmen are a useful set of men; but we hope Mr. BERGH will take no harm at their hands. As for Judge WHITING—we leave him entirely to their mercy, and that of his Honor the Mayor.

Students of natural history and the vast army of City children who have built great expectations upon seeing the Central Park zoölogical collection in pleasant and comfortable quarters when the fine weather opens, will be disappointed. The location for extensive and beautiful gardens, to vie in time with those of London, Paris and Berlin, was long since selected; and the beasts and birds which have been contributed by public-spirited citizens in all parts of the country already make a good variety for proper exhibition. The Commissioners, however, inform the public that little progress has been made in laying out the grounds, in consequence of the lack of a sewer to drain the surface. The delay is unfortunate, not less for the animals than for the public. The collection must therefore languish for some time longer in the cramped and disagreeable quarters which have been assigned it at the Old Arsenal, and the public must wait until the sewer shall be finished. We have no doubt that the work will be hurried forward as fast as possible.

The Sutro Tunnel scheme is still before Congress, but we understand that the original proposition for the Government to advance half the estimated cost, &c., has been essentially changed. When brought before the House the bill will now provide for a guarantee by the Government of the interest on the Company's bonds for a term of years, the interest to be repaid by a reservation of forty per cent. of the profits of the tunnel; and after the whole amount of interest shall have been repaid, the Company is bound to set apart, under direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, ten per cent. of its profits forever, as an endowment fund for a National School of Mines.

A correspondent of the London Times points attention to the long-expressed opinion of King LEOPOLD, of Belgium, in regard to the Island of Crete. On the liberation of Greece, Prince LEOPOLD was offered the crown of the country; but he refused it, as everybody knows. In his correspondence, at that time, with the Duke of Wellington and the Earl of Aberdeen, he declared that the want of Candia would greatly cripple the new Kingdom and exasperate the feelings of the Hellenes, both of the island and the main land. That argument is as forcible now as it was forty years ago, and in all likelihood we shall not soon hear the last of this Greek trouble—a trouble compared with which that of Spain is merely a thing acted in a corner, and of limited bearing, comparatively. Greece is in a very combustible position, from which, little and poor as she is, she may, at any time, set all Europe in a blaze of "Greek fire,"—and all the sooner, probably, from her very littleness, and the poverty which makes people belligerent at times.

True bills have been found by the Grand Jury in London against the directors of OVEREND, GURNEY & CO., committed for trial on charges of conspiracy and fraud. The ultimate decision is looked forward to with great interest, not only on account of the magnitude of the pecuniary interests involved, and the social position of the prisoners, but as likely to form a most important precedent. So many unsound and decaying businesses have been foisted upon the English public in the shape of "Limited Liability Companies," that consternation will be carried into many high commercial circles should criminal responsibility be brought home to men who deliberately sold the "good-will" of a bankrupt concern to a too credulous body of shareholders. For some years past, the last resource of London bankers, merchants, and manufacturers, when they found their affairs not in a prosperous state, has been to "cook" their accounts and sell out to a Company, the shareholders in which flattered themselves that they were going to get all the profits of business without themselves possessing the qualifications for conducting it. The public overlooked the risk of fraud in the matter, and the venders of worthless "good-wills" overlooked the risk of detection and punishment. The former class have been largely victimized, and it looks now as as if the latter were going to have their turn.

The Howard University Brick Business.

We have heard it said that some "Western Correspondent" was about to give that monstrous imposition of the Howard University "brick business" a thorough "airing," that he had all the "facts," and would show up everybody, high and low, and some persons pretty high in favor, too, connected with it; and that he would lash the parties to the transaction without mercy.

The threatened exposé has not yet come, but there never was a case more deserving of airing. Frauds in food and drink are bad enough and plentiful enough; but when it comes to frauds in buildings of so audacious and reckless a character, it is quite time for "exposure." How many buildings may have been constructed from the material furnished by this Brick Company we do not know; it is said, however, that they have supplied their choice products to different parts of the country, and have other contracts to fill.

And yet we find Mr. MULLETT, a supervising architect, writing to President SUTHERLAND that, in testing the "specimen brick" sent to him by the latter, he "washed it to pieces in a bucket of water within two minutes," and that "a single severe storm, after a continued rain, would leave the building a ruin." Mr. CLARK, in like manner, after soaking a brick, "easily broke it with a slight tap of the hammer, and the pieces crumbled under the pressure of the hand."

These, be it observed, were "specimen bricks," taken from the building. Nice building, that, for the daily occupation of several hundred young people, in which to pursue their studies! And a nice Brick Company to patronize! We have a phrase ready made in the language for that solidity and substantiality which makes a "perfect brick;" here is a chance to enrich the slang vocabulary with a similar phrase denoting utter and disgraceful sham.

The Growth of Brooklyn.

No person doubts that the City of Brooklyn must grow. It would be discreditable to its churches, its church people, its BEECHER, its LITTLEJOHN and its other bright lights if it did not grow. But it grows so quickly that even old stagers in New-York, accustomed to witness the most rapid changes and improvements, become astonished at the temerity of the Prospect Park Commissioners when they begin to moot the idea of establishing a university—a Metropolitan University at that. That is good for the thinkers, but the aforesaid Commissioners suggest more—something for the eaters—(a somewhat larger class than the thinkers)—to wit: a market where the produce of Long Island farms shall be offered for sale to the masses. The location proposed for this purpose would certainly be better as a market than as a park. The market itself is a good idea, as, wherever located, it will be advantageous alike to farmers and purchasers—both classes having less trouble as well as less expense.

Well, Brooklyn has its magnificent churches, and its pastors include many of the most talented preachers and scholars in the country; it has its Academy of Music, its Historical Society, its Mercantile Library, its Polytechnic School, its Packer Institute, its Prospect Park, its County Court-house, which has not swallowed up millions of dollars for iron, marble, &c., and a number of other vigorous institutions, public and private, all of good standing and worthy elements to be possessed by a growing city. The world moves, so let the Metropolitan University be established; let the Brooklyn City Market be erected and opened; let Prospect Park flourish, and may everybody in the City of Churches be happy; and when the East River Bridge—also a Brooklyn idea—shall be completed, we shall all be one people.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatrical.

THE "FORTY THIEVES" AT NIBLO'S.

The burlesque at this theatre has been witnessed—one may now say—by the highest and the lowest in the land. Gen. GRANT has viewed it from A. T. STEWART'S private box, and Pat Malloy has seen it from his democratic seat in the gallery. It is to be played until further notice. Meanwhile its authorship appears to be in dispute. Mr. FARNIE steps forward, and in the language of Touchstone, "a poor thing, but mine own," claims the whole:

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

SIR: In justice to Mr. BYRON, as well as to myself, will you allow me to correct your dramatic critic's statement that the version of "The Forty Thieves," now being performed at Niblo's Garden, is a reconstruction of Mr. BYRON'S piece on the same subject? The present burlesque is as entirely original as any new handling of the story can reasonably hope to be at this time of day. Yours &c.,
HENRY B. FARNIE.

NIBLO'S GARDEN, Feb. 5.

THE LIGHTS IN THEATRES.

A perilous mistake is made in the lighting up of most of our City theatres. The gas jets are for the greater part without globes, shades or other softening mediums, and the influence of this flaring illuminhtion is most hurtful to the eyesight. The new theatres are particularly faulty in this respect, and ultimate blindness to a majority of our habitual play-goers will be the result of this important mistake, unless it is speedily corrected. In Brougham's Theatre none of the lights in the auditorium are covered, and in Booth's and at Pike's there is a damaging innovation in the shape of a line of minute and blazing jets of gas, employed to illuminate the ceiling and dome, which are wholly unshaded. The lighting capabilities of these theatres is shown in the following figures: In Pike's Opera House there are 881 gas jets to illuminate the house, in front of the curtain, alone; of course all of these are not unprotected by globes. At Brougham's only 150 lights are used; these, however, are many times doubled through the mirror-lined walls. At Booth's Theatre 870 lights are used in the auditorium and 780 on the stage.

NEW-YORK THEATRE.

The paragons of badness who were acting here last week brought their performances to a sudden end last night. "Richelieu" in the afternoon and "Richard III." at night were the closing burlesques. The house will not be shut up, we believe, and a variety entertainment will be offered for the present. The WORRELL Sisters have rented the theatre for another year from May 1.

THE TAMMANY.

The Japanese Troupe are to remain another week at this nest of variety. Additions have been made to the various entertainments in the lower halls since the opening, and there is now a "Salon of Magic," a "Panaroma of Washington" and a quartette of Tyrolean singers to be seen in the concert-room below the Grand Theatre.

Various Notes of the Drama Elsewhere.

Mr. EDMUND FALCONER is at work upon a new localization of "Ixion," to be produced at Wood's Museum as an afternoon entertainment exclusively.

Mlle. MARIE ROSE, a pupil of the Imperial Conservatory, Paris, is to make her American début as a violinist in the parlors of Prof. DODWORTH (President of the Philharmonic) on Monday evening, Feb. 8.

JOHN BROUGHAM, it appears, has been taxed by the External Overcoat Collectors. The comedian very politely intimates in a "personal" that "If the party who took a fancy to my overcoat was influenced by the inclemency of the weather, all right, but if by commercial considerations, I am ready to negotiate for its return."

ELISE HOLT, the new-comer in the burlesque field—who is to début in "Lucretia Borgia, M. D.," at the Waverley Theatre on the 16th, was choked by a fish-bone last week, (unromantic accident,) and was prevented from acting two nights in consequence, at the Boston Theatre.

EDWIN BOOTH has in his cast of "Romeo and Juliet" an actor, Mr. W. C. DRUMMOND, who is, perhaps, the oldest member of his profession (actively employed) in the United States. He played at the Park Theatre with COOKE, KEAN, SHERIDAN KNOWLES, &c., and there is to be seen at WINDUST'S an old Park bill of 1813, in which Mr. DRUMMOND'S name may be found in a conspicuous part.

The ticket speculators have been badly sold by their usual victims this week, and their losses have been very heavy. These sidewalk gentry bought largely of tickets for the opening nights of Bougham's and Booth's Theatres, but, since the first evening, the people have refused to buy, and have stayed away from those houses in large numbers. This is just the lesson which the speculators need, and we are glad the public have the sense and strength to enforce its teaching. It is also operating well upon the managers, and Mr. MAGONIGLE, we see, announces on behalf of Mr. BOOTH, that a sufficient number of seats are to be reserved every day for the evening sale, to accommodate visitors who may not have time to secure tickets before evening to the theatre.

NELSE SEYMOUR, the spare giant of negro minstrelsy, is to have a benefit on next Thursday evening at Bryant's Opera House.

A new opera house was opened at Elizabeth, N. J., on Wednesday last, by the "J. R. Thomas Operatic Troupe;" (!) and a new theatre, to be known as "The Collingwood Opera House," was opened at Poughkeepsie on Tuesday evening. In the latter the auditorium measures 75 by 80 feet. The stage measures 60 by 34 feet, without dressing-rooms. The proscenium arch spans 36 feet over a drop-curtain 41 feet 6 inches in length.

A bill is before the State Legislature to incorporate "The Academy of Music of the City of Albany," with a capital of $100,000, divided into shares of $100 each.

The new opera house in Hartford has been quite a success from the beginning. Twelve performances have been given there since its opening, by OWENS, BARNEY WILLIAMS, FORREST, and a musical company, with a net profit of $7,200, to be divided among the lot.

Mr. L. R. SHEWELL has transferred his services from the Boston Museum to Selwyn's Theatre.

The Clipper states that Mr. EDWIN ADAMS' engagement at Booth's Theatre is upon what is known as stock-star terms, that is, he will be pecuniarily interested in each Saturday night's performance after the first or second week, each Saturday night being set apart for Mr. ADAMS, who will be the star, and will produce his own pieces, Mr. BOOTH not appearing on that night, after the first week or so, as the scenery is not quite ready yet to commence what will be known as the "Adams Nights."

Mr. J. H. CATHCART, who will be remembered as in Mr. CHARLES KEAN'S company when at the Broadway Theatre in this City, has been engaged for Wood's Museum, and is now in this City. As his services will not be required at once, he goes to St. Louis to play a short engagement.

The Mobile Theatre is closed for want of patronage.

JOHN OWENS plays two weeks longer at the Broadway.

The WORRELLS open in Chicago to-morrow night.

JEFFERSON will probably succeed EDWIN BOOTH at his own theatre after the runs of "Romeo" and "Winter's Tale."

The receipts of the leading Philadelphia theatres for the past four years are given as follows:

	1865.	1866.	1867.	1868.
Arch	$158,867	$118,323	$113,077	$142,196
Walnut	91,890	173,630	150,790	167,249
Chestnut	166,103	122,775	119,194	101,434

The Drama Abroad.

Miss LUCY RUSHTON is announced to appear at the St. James Theatre, London, in a new drama called "Red Hands."

The following is a fair sample of the nostrums proffered by comic singers to their patrons at the music halls:

"Oh, I never shall forget those happy days,
When down at Farmer Vezey's,
How we used to gather up the eggs from the cows,
And the milk from the cocks and the hens!"

This refined composition is always received by an intelligent British audience, with roars of laughter and shouts of applause.

The total receipts of the 27 theatres, concert saloons, dancing halls, &c., in Paris, for December last, was 4405,000, gold—an increase of $50,000 over 1867.

Mlle. DEJAZET being about to leave the Parisian stage, the Emperor expressed a desire to see her for the last time, and to give the Prince Imperial an opportunity of seeing her inimitable talents.

SCHNEIDER is to return to London in June.

ROBERTSON'S last comedy, "School," (which Mr. WALLACK announces,) is taken from a German play, based upon the story of "Cinderella." It is described as a pleasant French picture, describing how a number of youthful fair ones learn for the first time the agreeable sensation that they have a heart.

"Gertrude's Money Box" (a comedy) and "King Tomidol" (burlesque) are the newest things at the London theatres.

Concerts.

Mrs. HATTIE FARNSWORTH will be the vocalist at Mr. THEODORE THOMAS' eleventh grand concert, which takes place at Steinway Hall to-night. Mr. THEODOR MARTENS will also make his first appearance as a pianist. The orchestral numbers are varied and interesting.

At Irving Hall the Mendelssohn Orchestral Union comes out with an unusually strong programme, both instrumentally and vocally. The orchestra numbers sixty performers, and the soloists are Mrs. BALDWIN, (soprano,) Miss P. HEIMLER, (contralto,) Mr. POLLAK, Mr. MOLLENHAUER, and Mr. HARRY SANDERSON. The accompaniments will be played by Mr. LESSERVE.

THE PRESIDENT ELECT.

Movements of Gen. Grant Yesterday—His Visitors—The Lincoln Club and the Republican Central Committee—Addresses of Gen. Cochrane and C. S. Spencer—Gen. Grant's Response.

Gen. GRANT'S rooms at the Fifth-avenue Hotel were besieged, yesterday, by the office-seekers, who called singly and in squads, from an early hour in the morning until late in the day. Besides these a great many of the solid men of the Metropolis, and their wives and daughters, called during the day. Few of them, however, saw Gen. GRANT, who, soon after breakfast, accompanied only by Mrs. GRANT, took a carriage and spent the greater part of the day in calling on their personal friends. Among those whom they visited were Mr. MARSHALL O. ROBERTS, Judge PIERREPONT, and Mr. CHAS. RODGERS, an old friend, at the Everett House.

During the day, Admiral FARRAGUT, Gen. SICKLES, HENRY T. TUCKERMAN, Dr. HAYES, the Arctic explorer, Gen. BURTON, HORACE GREELEY, CHAS. A. DANA, SAMUEL BARBER, Gen. EGBERT L. VIELE, Mrs. CHAS. P. DALY, Mrs. SAMUEL WETMORE, JOHN JACOB ASTOR, Gen. "Sprig" CARROLL, Messrs. BEEKMAN, LIVINGSTON, and CRITTENDEN, called to see the General. The latter returned to the hotel at a little before 4 o'clock P. M. He had hardly set foot in his parlor, before two political delegations were announced. They were the Lincoln Club, of the City of New-York, and a Committee of twenty—one appointed by the Republican Central Committee to wait upon Gen. GRANT and ask when he would receive the members of that body. The two delegations being informed that the General would see them, went up stairs together and entered his drawing-room.

The Lincoln Club was preceded by its President, Hon. JOHN V. GRIDLEY, who introduced each member by name to Gen. GRANT, who shook hands with each of them. This torture having been duly inflicted upon him, Gen. JOHN COCHRANE came forward and launched an address at him.

GEN. COCHRANE'S SPEECH.

Gen. COCHRANE said: The Lincoln Club of the City of New-York had commissioned him to return their grateful thanks to Gen. GRANT for permitting them to have the honor of calling upon him at this time. They did so as workingmen in the great field of national politics coming from the people, of the people, and one with the people, by whose efforts he had been elevated to the highest office in the gift of the nation. In the late canvass they had been found in great numbers about those booths at the polling places which bore the inscription: "The friends of Gen. GRANT meet here." In consultation, Gen. COCHRANE felicitated Gen. GRANT upon his election to the Presidency, and upon his high record on the roll of those who have served the country well.

GEN. GRANT'S RESPONSE.

To all of this Gen. GRANT simply replied:

"I am very glad to meet you all, and have an opportunity to shake hands with you. I've nothing to say in the way of a speech, General."

To which Gen. COCHRANE replied: "No, your deeds have spoken for you, General."

Gen COCHRANE now introduced Mr. CHAS. S. SPENCER, President of the Committee from the Republican Central Committee, remarking that he had come to ascertain when the Central Committee could have an interview, and that that body represented 40,000 voters who had cast their ballots for him at the late election.

MR. SPENCER'S SPEECH.

Mr. SPENCER launched another address at Gen. GRANT, of which the following is a true copy:

Gen. GRANT: The gentlemen comprising the Committee for which I have the pleasure and honor to speak, have come here by the request of the Union Republican Central Committee of this City, respectfully and earnestly to ask you to name a time and place when and where the Central Committee can wait upon you in a body. Your compliance with this request will gratify a large number of your sincere and efficient friends.

GEN. GRANT'S REPLY.

Gen. GRANT said that he would be glad to see the Central Committee at 3:30 P. M. Monday, and it was arranged that they should call at that time.

One of the Committee now presented to Gen. DENT for Gen. GRANT four silver medals, one of which, he said, had been given to a British soldier for gallantry in the Peninsular War, and the others had been given to soldiers who had served gallantly in the Crimean War, at Lucknow and at Gushorat respectively. Gen. GRANT received them with thanks, and the politicians retired.

In the evening, Gen. GRANT was present at a dinner-party, given in his honor, at the residence of Hon. HAMILTON FISH. This morning, the General will probably attend church at St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church. To-morrow evening he will be the guest of Mr. S. B. CHITTENDEN, in Brooklyn. During the morning he will call upon Mr. JOHN C. HAMILTON, and in the afternoon, at 3:30, will receive the Republican Central Committee in accordance with the arrangements above set forth. Gen. GRANT seems to be in excellent health. He is accompanied by Mrs. GRANT, his father-in-law, Gen. DENT and Gen. ADAM BADEAU. The latter receives all his letters and cards, and has his hands full in responding to those that deserve answering, and destroying the numberless applications of the office-seekers.

THE MINISTER TO SPAIN.

Letter from Hon. John P. Hale—His Quarrel with his Secretary.

JOHN P. HALE, United States Minister to Spain, has addressed the following private letter to a member of the New-Hampshire delegation in Congress:

LEGATION UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
MADRID, Jan. 1, 1869.

To Honorable ——:

Mr. KOENER, United States Minister to Spain, left this country finally on the 20th of July, 1864, and from that time to Sept., 1865, Mr. PERRY was the Chargé d'Affaires and sole representative of the United States Government in Madrid, when Mr. HALE entered upon the duties of Minister to Spain.

Some time in 1864—the precise date of the publication does not appear, but it was unquestionably after Mr. KOENER left Madrid—Mr. PERRY published a pamphlet in the Spanish language of 135 pages, in which he represented himself as agent in Madrid of a company possessing a capital of 40,000,000 reals,, equal to $2,000,000, for the purpose of laying submarine telegraphic cables. Whether this publication was made before or after July 20, 1864, is of no substantial interest; it is only material as showing whether PERRY was Secretary of Legation or acting as Chargé d'Affaires at the time. In either case his conduct was equally illegal and prohibited, only such a proceeding would appear more scandalous if he were Chargé than if he were only Secretary.

Mr. KOENER left Madrid temporarily on June 12, 1865, and was absent until Sept. 25, 1865, Mr. PERRY acting as Chargé d'Affaires, and taking advantage of Mr. KOENER'S absence, being himself sole representative of the Government of the United States in Madrid, addressed a memorial to the Spanish Minister of Ultramar in aid of the several submarine communications which the memorial alleges have before been presented to the consideration of her Catholic Majesty. This memorial or petition, signed by the representative of the United States, is most disgustingly laudatory of the Queen of Spain and her husband.

As Mr. KOENER returned to Spain in September following, nothing further seems to have been done by PERRY about this memorial, and the Spanish Government appears to have taken no action upon it. Indeed, the principal business of Mr. PERRY from this time seems to have been looking after these Spanish contracts, and his great unwillingness to give up his position as Secretary of Legation arose from the fact of his making the holding of it subservient to his interest in private and speculating jobs under the Spanish Government. Finding that Mr. PERRY was extending those contracts from submarine telegraphs to canals, I, on the 23d day of June, 1867, addressed a note to Mr. SEWARD, advising him how PERRY was conducting himself in this matter, and SEWARD wrote to him absolutely and peremptorily either to resign his post as Secretary, or to withdraw from all connection with the Spanish contractors. I never knew what answer PERRY made to this communication, but I do know that he neither resigned nor withdrew, and very soon the name of SEWARD appears among the names of those interested in some one or more of these jobs of PERRY'S under the Spanish Government.

PERRY hereafter appears more open in his illegal connection with these Spanish contracts, signs himself, in his communications to the Spanish Government, attorney for the Submarine Telegraphic Company, and becomes utterly defiant of all authority or control of the Minister of Legation, and is absent just when and where he pleases. He was absent last year more than seventy days at one time, and this year he was absent from some time in the latter part of April until the 28th of May.

When on the morning of that day, being the morning on which the news of the result of the impeachment trial reached Madrid, he, after a month's absence, walked into the Legation, and the first thing he said was to ask me if "I knew who was President of the United States," But I will not enlarge upon this theme. If I were to undertake to relate to you all the outrages and indignities that this PERRY has been guilty of toward me since I have been in Spain, I should have to write you a history of my whole life here.

While I was absent in Paris about a year ago, on leave of absence from my Government, PERRY behaved most scandalously, usurping the place of Minister; indeed, his conduct was so outrageous on this occasion, that it was the subject of much comment in Madrid, and Baron CANITZ, the Minister of Prussia, asked the Sub-Secretary of State to make some representation of PERRY'S conduct to the United States, and thus I received from a Minister of a foreign Power some redress for PERRY'S treatment, which I should have had from my own Government.

But, as I said before, I am not going to give you a history of my daily life. I will, however, give you the account of one transaction, which I wish you to read through carefully, and when you have read it and seen the duplicity of SEWARD, and of the Secretary of this Legation, then remember that it only discloses a fair specimen of what I have had constantly to endure from these two men.

This history is found fully and distinctly stated in my letter dated Nov. 18, 1867, to Mr. SEWARD, a copy of which I herewith inclose. The simple truth of the matter is that PERRY continued to act as Secretary of Legation without making, or attempting to make any disturbance or difficulty, all the time I was at Paris, until about the time of my return, or until the 7th or 8th of November. He acknowledged all my communications, which were addressed to him as Secretary without any objection, remonstrance or intimation that he was dissatisfied with the position of Secretary, or had any idea of assuming or pretending to be anything else.

My communications addressed to the Spanish Minister of State, of the date of Oct. 21, which Mr. PERRY says in his letter of Nov. 7, 1867, met with such strenuous opposition from the Spanish Government, he acknowledged the receipt of in the usual manner, and in a letter which he wrote to me on the 30th of October, he writes that he had received it, recorded it, and sent it to the Minister of State, and says not one word about there being any objection made about receiving it.

I inclose you a copy of PERRY'S letter to me in which he makes no mention of any difficulty of the kind, the solemn truth is that PERRY'S statement which he sent home to SEWARD about the difficulties in the Legation growing out of my absence, are wholly, totally, and maliciously false, or, as the Minister of State, Mr. ARAZOLA, indignantly pronounced them, "false, a hundred times false." Mr. PERRY has not only been insolent and insubordinate, but he has obtruded his insulting letters to me into all the current official letters of the Legation, copying them in those books in order to give them publicity and notoriety.

The falsehoods which he wrote about what Mr. ARAZOLA, Minister of State, had said to him, he has obtruded also into the records. PERRY early began his hostile course to me, and, in fact, behaved so badly that SEWARD wrote to him on the 20th of August, 1866, authorizing me to dismiss him from the office of Secretary. I, thinking his family, and believing he had some magnanimity at least, fully and frankly forgave him all his past insubordination, foolishly hoping that my forbearance and forgiveness would be appreciated by him, and we should thereafter go forth proceed more harmoniously together, but I found I had no such intention when I say from that time he became more assiduously hostile than ever, although not so openly as at first.

I inclose to you a copy of a letter which he sent to me on the 25th of July, 1864, in which he says I will let him know if there is any official business to be transacted to-day, in which case he will wait on me and take my orders." I inclose, also, another copy of a letter in which he formally declines all intercourse with me except that which is strictly official.

The occurrence which PERRY refers to was a most disgraceful fight which he had in my house with a man named Dr. MACKERLAIN, an American. These two individuals had been enemies for years, and meeting by accident in my house during my absence, they came to blows in the presence of my wife and daughter, and had to be separated by a servant.

After PERRY'S conduct during my absence in Paris, as before stated, I sent to SEWARD my statement as appeared in my letter to him, dated Nov. 18, 1867, a copy of which letter accompanies this.

SEWARD did not answer this communication, and without uttering, so far as I know, a word of blame or excuse to PERRY, he sent me a brief and brutal notice that my resignation, "promptly transmitted, would be accepted."

Soon after this, I received letters from various friends in the United States informing me that the name of SEWARD appears among the members, and I believe, office-holders, of one of PERRY'S companies here, and this is the only explanation that I can give of his strange conduct. In November, 1867, SEWARD wrote to me, substantially, that PERRY was so strong in the Senate that if there was to be an issue between him and me, before the Senate, PERRY would be victorious. But I will not weary you much longer with this tale of wrong and indignities.

Certainly, if he had been a secret agent of the Confederate Government, especially instructed to annoy, harass and perplex me in every possible way, he could not have done it more effectually than he has; and since the name of SEWARD has appeared among the list of his confederates in Spanish contracts, he has been more insolent and defiant than before, and if possible, more negligent and inattentive to the duties of his office, though this he could hardly be without abandoning them altogether.

The truth is, PERRY is a Spaniard and nothing else; a Spanish woman has married him and controls him. As he once stated to me, he is a Unitarian of the Dr. Channing school, but he has joined the Roman Catholic Church, and neither his wife nor children speak the English language. All his interests, associations and business connections are Spanish, and he never intends returning to America.

Now I will frankly tell you what I desire. I have been here three years, and during that time have been daily insulted by my Secretary of Legation, who has kept the office for the purpose of making it subsidiary to his private interests in illegal and improper speculations under the Spanish Government. In this he has latterly been aided and abetted by the Secretary of State, who has twice within a year tried to remove me from my post as Minister.

Now, I confess that I am weak enough to want to triumph over these two men who have used me so basely for so long a time, and I should be much gratified if the New-Hampshire delegation would recommend that I be continued here under Gen. GRANT. I do not say how long; I do not care how long, so that it be after SEWARD and PERRY are both out of office. Will you be kind enough to see my friend E. B. WASHBURNE, and ask him to interest himself in this matter.

I have written you a long letter, longer than I had intended to write, but really could not seem to write less. Read my two letters, of which I send copies, carefully, and you will see the falsehood of PERRY fully set forth. This is merely a chapter, and by no means the worst one, of my whole experience here. JOHN P. HALE.

Another Letter from Mr. Hale.

The Concord (N. H.) Monitor publishes an extract from a letter from Hon. JOHN P. HALE, Minister to Spain, to the editor, Hon. GEORGE G. FOGG, late Minister to Switzerland, in which the former contradicts certain reports about his failing health, and says:

"I wish to thank you for a number of pleasant things you have said in the Independent Democrat of your old friend. You may be assured I appreciate any such kind remembrance on the part of my old friends very much—and the more so as I have had nothing but the most bitter and malignant hostility on the part of my Secretary, who has been countenanced by SEWARD in his openly hostile and malignant course. SEWARD'S hostility you can understand, it being partly of the same character as that of yourself, and partly owing to my opposition to the corrupt jobs with and under the Spanish Government, with which it has been sought to connect the United States Legation."

Mr. FOGG comments thus on the above:

"In confirmation of what Mr. HALE says, we may add that we were a little astonished to hear much and know something of PERRY, Secretary of Legation at Madrid, during our residence in Europe. And from what we know and heard, we are not surprised that Mr. HALE'S experience with him proved similar to that of every American Minister who has been associated with him. Marrying a Spanish wife who is a bigoted Catholic and a notorious intriguant, PERRY is nothing more or less than a bad Spaniard himself."

A SUPPOSED PIRATE

An American Vessel Seized by Coolies and Transformed into a Piratical Cruiser—Horrible Fate of the Crew—Recovery of the Ship.

Some months since, the Admiral commanding our Asiatic Squadron received information that a merchant bark named Cayolti had put into Hakodadi under very peculiar circumstances. It was supposed she was a pirate, sailing under American colors. The Admiral accordingly directed the commander of the Iroquois to proceed to the point where the vessel lay and investigate the matter, which he did with the following result:

UNITED STATES STEAMER IROQUOIS,
AT SEA, Nov. 20, 1868.

SIR: I have the honor to report that in obedience to your orders of Oct. 22, I proceeded to Hakodadi, where I arrived on the afternoon of the 27th of November. The following morning I visited the bark Cayolti, in company with the United States Consul, and gave her a thorough overhauling, which resulted in the discovery of the sea letter, crew list, clearance and other papers signed and sealed by the United States Consul at Callao, Peru. We found on board one United States flag, and an English and a Spanish ensign. A Chinaman who had been on board of her some two or three years stated that during that time she had always sailed under the American flag. Having satisfied myself that she had undoubtedly been using our colors, I began an investigation of the Chinaman, to arrive, if possible, at some of the facts and solve the great mystery connected with the affair. The vessel cleared from Cahao on the 16th of January last, and sailed for Pascamayo and other ports in the north of Peru; having received on board from the ship Esperanza and another vessel then lying in the harbor some forty-eight Chinese coolies. On the morning of the third day out, the Chinese, armed with hatchets and spades, rushed on deck and drove the mate and watch overboard; they then lowered a boat and despatched them while struggling in the water, and returning, hoisted the boat. The watch below were then brought on deck, and all but the Captain and his Chinese servant were made fast to an anchor, which was let go, taking them with it to the bottom of the sea. All the statements agree that the Captain was retained on condition that he would take the vessel to China. There is no doubt that she brought up on the coast of Kamschatka, or some of the islands in that vicinity; and they were evidently in the ice, as they say that some of the natives came alongside of the vessel dressed in furs, and rode on sledges drawn by dogs. Besides, a quantity of furs was found about the vessel and on the persons of the Chinese. The copper is likewise torn off in several places. A few days after arriving at the ice island (as they call it) the Captain, who, up to that time, had been confined in the master's room, was allowed to go on shore for provisions, taking with him his Chinese servant. Neither of them returned to the bark. A few days after the Captain had left, a gale sprang up which parted the chain. Eventually they brought up in Volcano Bay, to the north of Hakodadi, where they remained for two or three weeks, and then were piloted into Hakodadi by two Japanese. After the investigation I ordered a survey upon the vessel. Finding it impossible to fit her for a Winter voyage to Shanghae, I overhauled her as thoroughly as possible, caulked the hatches, moored her securely, and left her in charge of the United States Consul, who reports all the circumstances connected with the case to Gen. VAN VALKENBURGH, our Minister to Japan. The Japanese authorities agreed to keep charge of the Chinese and look out for the vessel. From the statement of the Captain of the ship, DOLORES NYANTE, before the Governor of Macao, it would appear that there were $12,000 to $15,000 on board of the Cayolti. About $1,800 in gold and silver were recovered, and are now in the hands of the United States Consul at Hakodadi. Before leaving Hakodadi I visited the Chefudji or Governor; on his returning my visit, I gave him the customary salute and an entertainment, all of which seemed to please him very much. * * *

Your obedient Servant,
EARL ENGLISH, Commander.

Rear-Admiral S. C. ROWAN, Commanding Asiatic Squadron.

PERSONAL.

Mr. HENRY BERGH will deliver an address in the Assembly Chamber, at Albany, on Tuesday evening, 9th inst., by invitation of several leading and prominent gentlemen of that city.

Rev. Father PETERS, Pastor of Trinity Church, in Detroit, died yesterday morning of small-pox.

Improvement in Velocipedes.

Now that so large a portion of the public have become victims to the velocipede fever, anything new in regard to these machines is a matter of general interest. The latest improvement seems to be a Four-Wheeled Velocipede, patented by Mr. BRADFORD, brother of the celebrated artist. It is claimed to be superior in speed, style and comfort. One can sit in it with the same ease as in a buggy, and the effort necessary to run it is so slight that ladies or children can now take their daily exercise on a velocipede, and that, too, without any fear of an accident. These machines can now be tested at No. 626 Broadway, where J. H. THORP, the sole agent, is in daily attendance to exhibit the powers of the "Bradford Patent Four-Wheeled Velocipede," and dispose of State and county rights. Mr. BRADFORD'S letters patent cover this country, England, Belgium and France.—Herald.

LAW REPORTS.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT.

Before Judge Gilbert and a Jury.

HEAVY VERDICT AGAINST THE ERIE RAILWAY.

Camden C. Dike vs. The Erie Railway Company.

—This action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in the Port Jervis disaster last Spring. The defence was that the accident occurred at a point within the State of Pennsylvania, and that, by a statute of that State, the amount recoverable in actions of this nature was limited to the sum of $3,000. The Company also contend that they had exercised all possible care in the conduct of their road, and used every possible precaution to avoid accidents.

Judge GILBERT charged the jury briefly, after which they retired, and shortly returned with a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $35,000.

For plaintiff, Grenville T. Jenks and F. A. Ward. For defendants, Judge Geo. G. Reynolds and Newell, Dorman and Prentiss.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—SOUTHERN DISTRICT.

Before Judge Benedict.

BOND FORFEITED.

The United States vs. Bernard Kupfer.—The defendant, who is indicted for running an illicit distillery in Thirty-eighth-street, was called yesterday morning, and not appearing, h is bond was forfeited.

THE DEPUY CASE—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

The United States vs. Moses Depuy and Jacob Depuy.—A motion for a new trial was made in this case, on the ground that evidence which should have been admitted, had been excluded. The evidence which the defendants claim to have been improperly excluded, had reference to the connection of the elder Depuy with other transactions as an informer; the Court ruling that the defence must confine the testimony to his connection with the particular case before it. The defendants are also object to the ruling in reference to the declarations of the defendant made after the seizure of the whisky; the Court having held that such declarations made after the seizure could not be admitted. Motion reserved. For the motion, Mr. Cram; opposed, Mr. Phelps.

COMPROMISE OF REVENUE FRAUDS—DEDUCTION OF DUTIES—SHARES OF INFORMERS.

The United States vs. John W. George et al.—The defendants, being accused of defrauding the revenue, effected a compromise directly with the Secretary of the Treasury, by which they were to pay a certain sum in currency as penalties, and another sum in gold as duties. The money was paid into Court, and the Government now petitions for the duties. The Customs officers and informers resist on the ground that the whole is to be deemed, in law, penalties, to be distributed, and that the Secretary could not, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, ascertain the true amount of duties, and could not, by law, designate the money paid as duties.

There are several different persons claiming as informers, and a controversy also exists among them as to their respective shares. A large amount of testimony has been taken, and the case now comes before the Court for a settlement of the rights of all parties.

S. G. Courtney and Simon Towle for the United States; C. A. Seward for the Customs Officers and a portion of the informers; C. True for other informers, and A. W. Tenney for others. Decision reserved.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before Recorder J. K. Hackett.

The Ninth-avenue arson case, which has excited great interest, was concluded Saturday morning. A large crowd was in attendance.

Joseph Roll, who was remanded for sentence after acknowledging his guilt in the affair, was in attendance. Roll is a coarse, disagreeable-looking young man, while Baden is only remarkable for a stupid unconcerned appearance.

THE ARSON CASE.

The trial of Frederick Baden, accused of arson, was resumed. Capt. Ward, of the Twenty-second Precinct, was interrogated, and stated that he was present when the prisoner, Baden, was examined by Fire-Marshal Brackett; that he saw the prisoner sign the statement produced by the Fire-Marshal. He also certified to his (the witness') signature to the same statement.

The case was then opened for the defence, by the counsel for the prisoner, who said he should prove the previous good character of the prisoner, and the impossibility of his having committed the crime charged upon him on the night stated. He also said he should prove that the stock and fixtures in Baden's store cost him $960, and the license $250 additional. The counsel asked that the prisoner be examined as a witness in his own behalf, as to the statement produced by the Fire-Marshal. The request was denied by the Recorder as being contrary to law, although the Assistant District-Attorney stated he was willing that the testimony should be taken. Five witnesses were examined, and testified to the previous good character of the prisoner.

The counsel then entered into an extended argument, reviewing the testimony, which he claimed was of an incomplete and insufficient character. He asserted that the Fire-Marshal had been interested in securing a conviction, and the Insurance Company also desired to avoid the payment on the policy they had issued. He also asserted that the prisoner's previous good character, and the grave doubts which existed, should be sufficient to secure a verdict of acquittal.

The Assistant District-Attorney, Robert C. Hutchings, Esq., closed the case with a strong argument containing a restatement of the points in the case, and a review of the statements made to the Fire-Marshal, which he asserted was corroborated by material testimony. He defended the action of the Fire-Marshal, as the course which was demanded as his duty under the law. He closed by earnestly appealing for the conviction of the prisoner, as the perpetrator of one of the most heinous of crimes.

Recorder HACKETT charged the jury that the prisoner was charged as an accessory before the fact, and that if they believed that the prisoner was concerned in the arson, they should find a verdict of guilty.

With reference to the Fire-Marshal, and his action in this case, the Recorder said: "I do not think he is subject to the reproach which has been cast upon the character of the defence. He has a duty to perform, not only to the community, but to each and every person who lives in our midst. It is through the efforts of such men as he, in the performance of their public duties, that we are saved from the effects of such a terrible crime as I esteem that to be, whoever committed it. Were it not for his energy in working up this case he would have subjected himself to impeachment and removal from office. He would be guilty of a crime himself if he believed that these premises were fired by an incendiary if he did not use all means within his power to examine into the cause of the fire. In this case he has most thoroughly, efficiently and conscientiously discharged his duty." He charged the jury to render a good verdict, without regard to prepondérate to the benefit of the prisoner, but they should not allow such testimony to prevent finding a verdict of guilty, if there were no theory by which his innocence could be inferred. The case was then submitted to the jury.

The jury came in at 1 P. M. with a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment. The counsel for the prisoner moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the law, on the weight of the prisoner's previous good character, and stated that the prisoner had told him that he repudiated Roll's offer to burn the premises for $100, from which he inferred that Baden was innocent. Joseph Roll, who pleaded guilty of having set the fire, brought up with Baden for sentence.

The Recorder, in pronouncing sentence on the prisoners, said that a slight amount of evidence had created them of the accusation of arson in the first degree. After referring to the infamous nature of the crime, he said he knew no reason for the mitigation of the sentence, and pronounced sentence of ten years each at hard labor in the State Prison.

The Court then adjourned to Monday morning at 11 A. M.

COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS.

Before Justices Kelly and Dowling.

On the calendar of yesterday there were twenty four cases of petit larceny, thirteen of assault and battery, one of misdemeanor, one of cruelty to animals, and one of carrying a slung-shot. With one exception, these cases were devoid of any general interest.

OPERATIC DISCORDS.

Almost the entire company of Pike's Opera House assembled to see the final result of a discordant passage between Adolph Birgfeld, the manager, and Francis Tholer, one of the artists. From the testimony given it appeared that Tholer had announced his disgust with this country, and his desire to return to France; whereupon an amicable arrangement had been consummated, whereby Mr. Birgfeld was to release Tholer from his contract, and was to retain his daughter at a salary of $140 per month; and the manager also agreed to assist the dissatisfied bouffer in returning to his native country. Subsequently Tholer appears to have changed his mind, and visited Birgfeld in the box-office of Pike's Opera House, when he stated that he was doubtful of his right to break his contract, and though he would continue in the company, and also desired better terms for his daughter. To these demands Birgfeld answered that he was then very busy, and requested Tholer to call at 4 o'clock, when he would have more leisure. At the same moment Birgfeld opened the door for the other to pass out, when Tholer suddenly seized him around the neck and struck him several violent blows in the face, knocking out several of his teeth. Tholer was arrested, and the case being fully heard yesterday upon the charge of assault and battery, he was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and be confined one month in the Penitentiary. Several of the members of the company, together with Mr. Birgfeld, united in giving the defendant an excellent character, which had the effect of mitigating his punishment.

SURROGATE'S COURT.

Before Surrogate Tucker.

WILLS ADMITTED.

The wills admitted during the week ending Feb. 6, are as follows: Caroline Dremkel, George A. Beck, Francis Kroemecke, Marcia White, Elizabeth A. Mavatt, Charlotte Son, Isaac Arnold, John S. Armstrong, Eliza B. Barber, Adam Hoffman, Jacob S. Miller.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE.

Before Commissioner Osborn.

A COUNTERFEITING CASE.

United States vs. Bernard Connolly.—The defendant was arrested by Deputy Marshal H. A. Butts, for an alleged attempt to pass a counterfeit $5 note on a Washington Market dealer. He was held, in default of $5,000 bail, for an examination on the 8th inst.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE.

A MARSHAL'S JURY CASE.

Before First Deputy-Marshal Wm. H. Thompson.

In the matter of Balthasar Decker vs. John W. Holmes.—This is the first Marshal's jury case in over twenty years. The plaintiff, a citizen of New-Jersey, brought a replevin suit in the United States Circuit Court, to obtain from the defendant, a citizen of this State, the value of certain household furniture, which plaintiff claims the ownership of, which was contained in the house No. 125 West Twenty-sixth-street, and which defendant purchased at a sheriff's sale. It seems that some time since the house in question was occupied by one Hattie Leland as a house of prostitution; that she gave a chattel mortgage on the furniture in question to a woman named Spillane; that the latter foreclosed the mortgage, and was about to sell the furniture when she was enjoined from doing so by Judge McCunn; that this injunction was subsequently set aside by Judge Barbour, and the property sold by the Sheriff, Holmes becoming, as above stated, the purchaser. Decker claims the property as his, but another claimant, Hattie Leland, having filed a claim also to the property, the matter of this contesting ownership, as between Decker and Hattie, will have to be decided by a Marshal's jury.

A jury was accordingly summoned and the case was to have proceeded, but owing to the absence of two of the jurors, Messrs. Shields and Heywood, the case was postponed to secure their attendance, and attachments were issued against them.

THE TWELFTH REGIMENT.

In General Orders No. 2, Col. John Ward, of the Twelfth Regiment, announces that, the State Arsenal being pronounced to be at present in an unsafe condition and awaiting repairs, the wing drills ordered for Feb. 5 and 9 are hereby countermanded. So much of General Orders No. 2 as ordered division drills for the week commencing Feb. 15 will continue in force. The several companies of this command will assemble in Chasseur uniform, with leggings, for drill and instruction, at the regimental armory, corner Fourth-street and Broadway, as follows: Companies A, C and D on Tuesday evening, Feb. 9; Companies F, H and K on Wednesday evening, Feb. 10; Companies G and I on Thursday evening, Feb. 11; Companies B and E on Friday evening, Feb. 12. Line, on each occasion, will be formed at 8 o'clock P. M. Company roll-calls at 7:45 P. M. A field officer will conduct the drills, and the senior Lieutenant present will act as Adjutant. Drum-Major Strube will detail two drummers to report each evening.

THE THIRD BRIGADE.

Brig.-Gen. VARIAN, of the Third Brigade, in a recent order to his command, says that:

As the general regulations referring to company officers speak of them as occupying the most important positions in the service, both as regards the influence they exercise upon the soldiery, and the high responsibility attaching to them in the instruction, good order, and discipline of their respective commands, and state that no one should be elected to such office unless well qualified for the faithful performance of the duties of his station. For the purpose of carrying out the provision of the general regulations, and in order that none but competent and properly qualified persons may hereafter be commissioned as officers of this brigade, and also in order that the commandant of the brigade may be enabled properly to report to the Commander-in-Chief, as required by paragraph 83, Military Code, as to the qualification and fitness of such parties as may hereafter be elected as line officers of this brigade, it is ordered that in future the field officers of the several regiments of the brigade shall constitute a Board of Examination, to inquire into and examine as to the qualification and fitness of those hereafter elected to such positions in their respective regiments, and to report the result of such examination to these headquarters. Election returns of line officers must hereafter be accompanied by such report.

A Brigade Court Martial, for the trial of delinquent commissioned officers and non-commissioned staff officers of this brigade, will be appointed and ordered to convene on the second Monday in May and November in each year hereafter. Commandants of regiments will direct the Chiefs of Staff to make returns of all delinquent officers to the commandant of brigade, on or before the 1st days of May and November ensuing. The fines which may be collected by such Court from delinquent officers will be deposited with the County Treasurer, to the credit of the regiment to which such officers are attached.

For the purpose of observing uniformity throughout the brigade, in the formation of regimental bands, it is also ordered that (in accordance with the authorized tactics, paragraph 23, and appendix 2, article 1, form 1, paragraph 1, page 355, and form 2, paragraph 3, page 360,) the field music, if consolidated on the right, will take post in rear of the band, and form part of the same, and will, at all times, maintain this position, both while marching in column and on all reviews, when the band may be required to form out from the column in front of the reviewing officer. The following instructions from Upton's Tactics, appendix No. 1, page 350, will, in future, be strictly followed by the several regiments of this brigade, viz.: At all parades, when marching in column, the staff (except the Adjutant,) will take position in the order of rank, from right to left, on a line equal to the front of the column, five paces in front of the leading Captain; the non-commissioned staff (excepting the Sergeant-Major) in the order of rank, from right to left, five paces in rear of the file closers of the rear company.

Brigade headquarters have been established at Nos. 70 and 72 Bowery.

THE TWENTY-THIRD REGIMENT.

Col. Rodney C. Ward, of the Twenty-third Regiment, makes the following announcements in recent orders: Battalion drills are ordered as follows: Companies A, B, E, G and I on Tuesday evenings, Feb. 16 and 23, 1869; Companies C, D, F, H and K on Friday evenings, Feb. 19 and 26, 1869. Acting Drum-Major will detail four drummers for each drill. On each of the above evenings the field, non-commissioned staff, drummers and companies respectively detailed, will assemble at the State Arsenal, Portland-avenue, (in fatigue uniform,) at 8 o'clock. Fine for non-attendance, $5. These drills being for instruction no spectators will be allowed.

The non-commissioned staff, First Sergeants and Sergeants of this command will assemble at the Armory, in fatigue uniform, on Saturday evening next.

An Examining Board is ordered to convene at the Armory, on Monday evening, Feb. 8, and adjourn from time to time as may be nncessary. The following officers are detailed as members of the Board: Lieut.-Col. S. H. Farnham, Major C. E. Goldthwaite, Brevet Captain and Adjutant J. G. Gregory. The Board will institute a thorough examination into the capacity, attainments, and general fitness for the service, and efficiency of all persons holding, or who may be hereafter elected to positions as company non-commissioned officers. The entire non-commissioned staff, including General Guides, First Sergeants and Duty Sergeants are ordered to report for examination to the above Board on Thursday evening, March 4, at 8 o'clock.

The following elections are announced: Corporal Franklyn Coit to be Second-Lieutenant, vice Hogins promoted; Second-Lieut. H. S. Manning to be First-Lieutenant, vice Buncker, promoted; First-Lieut. H. Herbert Hogins to be Captain, vice Gregory, resigned; First-Sergt. Wm. S. Leaman to be First-Lieutenant, vice Hogins, promoted; Capt. Charles E. Goldthwait to be Major, vice Chapman, promoted.

The following appointment has been made: First-Lieutenant and Adjutant James G. Gregory to be Captain by brevet.

The Adjutant of the Regiment has addressed a note to Col. Ward, in which he says that

"Believing that nothing shows a well-organized regiment more than the correctness of its records, he has the honor to present the regiment with a gold medal to be worn one year by the First Sergeant of the Company which shall be adjudged annually to have the best record at the Regimental Headquarters for neatness, correctness and promptness in making out and forwarding all returns, reports, correspondence, &c. The field officers to be the judges, and make the award the first week in January of each year. The presentation to take place at the first battalion drill thereafter."

Col. Ward has accepted the medal, and given directions to have Adjutant Gregory's proposition carried out.

MISCELLANEOUS GOSSIP.

We announced last Sunday the unanimous election of Lieut.-Col. W. W. Remmey to the Colonelcy of the Twenty-second Regiment, though the interest of the hour at which the election closed prevented our obtaining the result for Lieutenant-Colonel and Major. As soon as the Colonelcy had been disposed of, Major Porter was also unanimously elected to the Lieutenant-Colonelcy, and an informal ballot was then held for the position of Major. Capts. John P. Camp and G. W. Wingate proved to be the leading candidates, when a ballot on their names was had, when Capt. Camp was declared elected. This makes an excellent board of field officers, and the regiment cannot fail to improve under the direction of these gentlemen, as they are popular with the rank and file and have the best interests of the command at heart. Col. Remmey has been connected with the regiment ever since its organization in October, 1861. He was mustered into the State service as a member of Company B, and rapidly rose to be commandant of that company. Under his lead the company prospered wonderfully, inspecting in Nov. 1867, 114 members present, the largest number in any company in the First Division. Since then nearly one-half of the members have retired and organized a new company, with the letter E. Lieut.-Col. Porter served with a volunteer regiment during the late war, and was in command of Company G when elected Major in 1867. Major Camp formerly commanded Company B, but when the new company was formed he accepted the command of that organization.

INDIANA.

The Congressional Contest in the Eighth District—Lobby Schemes in the Legislature—The Choice of Gould and Fisk in Indiana.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Monday, Feb. 1, 1869.

The Congressional contest in the Eighth District of Indiana, where a successor to Hon. DANIEL D. PRATT, our new United States Senator, is to be chosen on the 20th of February, bids fair to become an exceedingly exciting and interesting one. The Republicans of the district hold their nominating convention on the 11th of February at Kokomo, and already over a dozen candidates are leaving no stone unturned to secure the nomination, which, in a square party contest, would certainly be equivalent to an election, inasmuch as there is a Republican majority of over three thousand votes in the district. In all probability, however, the contest will assume a somewhat different shape. Hon. THOMAS STILLWELL, who was a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress, and afterward appointed by President JOHNSON Minister to Venezuela, is one of the candidates whose name is mentioned in connection with the nomination; and in case his claims should be disregarded by the Republican Convention, it is said he will run as an independent candidate. In that event, the Democrats, well aware as they are that they cannot elect a candidate of their own, will, no doubt, vote for Col. STILLWELL, although he stands now on as radical a platform as any of his Republican competitors, and did excellent service during last year's campaign. Some of the extreme Republicans in the district threaten that they will not vote for him in case he should be nominated by the Republican Convention, and, in that event, an independent candidate would probably be put into the field against him. These are "bolting" times in Indiana, and there is no telling what will be the result of the contest in the Eighth District of Indiana on the 20th of February.

GOV. BAKER AND THE CUMBACK MEN.

Although the friends of Lieut.-Gov. CUMBACK profess themselves highly pleased with the final result of the existing Senatorial struggle in this State, and even seem to have forgiven most of those who took part in defeating Mr. CUMBACK, they are still on the war path against Gov. BAKER, and make no secret of their purpose to revenge themselves on "Old Honesty," the flattering sobriquet by which His Excellency is known in this State. The first blow aimed at his head by his implacable adversaries in the Legislature will be a bill to reduce the Governor's salary from $7,500 to $3,000. This bill, insignificant as it may seem, will certainly meet with the most determined resistance, and, perhaps, lead to no less exciting debates in the halls of the General Assembly than the late memorable Senatorial contest. Other bills destined to curtail the powers of the Governor, it is said, will be proposed as soon as the salary question has been disposed of. The whole thing looks very much like a repetition en miniature of the struggle between Congress and President JOHNSON.

THE LEGISLATURE,

although it went to work in earnest as soon as the Senatorial struggle was over, has accomplished but very little up to this time. Among the important measures which will doubtless be adopted in the next few weeks, will be an act to abolish our township elections in the Spring, and unite them with the Fall elections; an act containing important modifications of our present Registry law; and a bill providing for a new Congressional apportionment of the State. The Apportionment bill passed at the legislative session of 1867, although it had been very carefully prepared, proved to be a very bungling affair, as the result of the October election showed; and it is, moreover, charged that parts of the bill were purposely framed so as to prevent the renomination and reelection of a very prominent Radical Congressman. Senator HUGHES, a very energetic and talented man, has charge of the bill providing for a new Congressional apportionment, and he is very confident that it will be passed, the Democrats, it is said, being willing to vote for a fair and equitable reapportionment. They will, how ever, offer a most determined resistance to the amendments which will be proposed for adding to the stringency of the Registry law. The outrageous frauds committed at the October and November elections, render the adoption of these modifications of the Registry law a matter of certainty; the Republicans in both Houses of the General Assembly will vote for them with one accord.

THE GREAT LOBBY SCHEME,

at the present session of the Legislature, is that the State should purchase back the Wabash and Erie Canal. This operation would involve an outlay of something like fifteen million dollars, and enrich a comparatively small number of speculators at the expense of the people. If the State of Indiana should again become the owner of the Wabash and Erie Canal, it would be in about the same condition as the man who drew the elephant in the lottery. Gov. BAKER denounced the scheme in the most emphatic manner in his late inaugural message, and the people have by a general expression of their decided opposition to the scheme. Still, the enemies of the lobby are very active, and as they have plenty of funds at their disposal, they have not by any means abandoned all hopes of ultimately attaining their object.

GOULD, FISK, AND VANDERBILT IN INDIANA.

The unexpected check which Messrs. GOULD and FISK suffered in not obtaining control of the Indiana Central Railroad has not excited any dissatisfaction in Indiana, insomuch as our people hope that the Erie Railroad Company will now try to get hold of another line leading through our State, and that it will not leave the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in undisputed possession of the field. Commodore VANDERBILT, on his part, it is rumored in this State, has for some time past been making efforts to get control of the Toledo and Wabash Railroad. It is said, however, that his efforts in this direction have thus far met with very little encouragement on the hands of the small "ring" of persons who hold nearly all the stock, and who will dispose of it only at very exorbitant rates. The receipts of our principal Indiana railroads during the month of January have been unusually light. As regards the course which the Legislature will pursue at its present session toward the railroads, a Railroad Fare bill, such as that which has given rise to so much excitement in the Illinois Legislature, has no prospects of success.

THE TEMPERANCE ALLIANCE

of Indiana will make in a few days another effort to induce the Legislature to pass a Prohibitory liquor Law, or, at least, to modify our present License law, so as to enable the citizens of every township and ward to vote on the question whether or not liquor shall be retailed in their midst. Although the Temperance Alliance, in its memorial to the Legislature, very emphatically declares that "public opinion throughout the country is rapidly advancing in favor of prohibitory legislation; that public sentiment in Indiana is rapidly drifting in this direction, and that, in their opinion, on a fair test of the question, disconnected from all party issues, a large majority of the voters of our State would declare in favor of the entire suppression of the sale of liquors to be used as a beverage" I am very sure that a majority of the members of the Legislature will refuse to comply with the prayer of the petitioners. Despite the denial of the petitioners, it is admitted on nearly all hands that a Prohibitory Liquor law, if submitted to the people of our State, would be voted down by an overwhelming majority; and, as regards the adoption of more stringent amendments to our present License law, it is a well-known fact that the more stringent provisions of the law are even now but imperfectly executed. W. C.

A New Ore Concentrator.

Mr. PEARCE gave an exhibition yesterday noon of his dry ore dresser before gentlemen interested in the subject, among others Mr. KATHAWOOD, of the Nevada Silver Peak Company, and Mr. RANDOLPH, of the Ophir Gold Mines in Colorado. The concentrator consists of a sheet-iron pan nineteen feet in diameter, divided into zones by four or five concentre partitions. Through the centre rises a shaft on which are two thin discs, three feet in diameter and half an inch apart. The space between them is divided by numerous radiating partitions. The shaft above the discs is hollow, and its cavity, open above, communicates below with the spaces between the discs. The discs are made to revolve, and the pulverized ore being poured into the shaft, descends to the discs, and is then scattered over the pan by centrifugal force, the metallic particles flying furthest from the centre, owing to their greater specific gravity. The result is that the outer zones contain nothing but the metal and the innermost space contains only impoverished ore, while the intermediate zones contain a certain amount of middlings to be worked over. The rate of speed at which the disc is run is to be graduated according to the specific gravity of the metal treated. It is claimed, and apparently demonstrated, that this machine is much more economical than any sort of water dressing. Mr. PEARCE stated that at the Ophir mine six tons of gold were saved by two ounces to the ton, every twenty-four hours, from one ton, containing three ounces; before the mine was worked the loss. This machine would prevent the waste. The machine exhibited is said to be capable of dressing thoroughly five or six tons of oil a day.

THE PACIFIC ROAD BOND CASE.

Further Examination of Witnesses—The Accused Unable to Furnish Bail, and Remanded.

The examination of witnesses in the alleged conspiracy to defraud the Union Pacific Railroad Company was continued yesterday before Justice DOWLING. The evidence was not of great importance, though interesting.

Charles Tuttle, being recalled, testified: I had a slight acquaintance with Lyon; my acquaintance with Lyon was a casual one; when he came to the city about this loan he referred me to Mr. Bushnell, who said I might rely upon what Lyon told me; the Company were selling the bonds at 102, less one per cent. commission; I have been shown some of these bonds since; Mr. Ham showed them to me; I don't know the day; it was about a month after the loan was negotiated; I did not see them in the possession of Mr. Cisco.

Cross-examined.—I participated in the negotiation of this loan; I consented to the arrangement; I received the money; my consent was given verbally; I don't recollect exactly what I said; I gave my consent to Mr. Ham; I think; I said I believed it to be all right; that's my impression; what I said; my best recollection is that I said "I believe it is all right, and we had better take the loan;" I don't know that it was in reply to any question about receiving the loan; this was in the morning of Dec. 19, at the office of the Union Pacific Railroad Company; when I say "we" I mean Mr. Ham and myself; I am not sure whether Mr. Lyon and Mr. Goodall were there when I decided; I decided to receive the $100,000 between one and three o'clock; it was about ten or eleven o'clock when I entered into conversation about this loan; I gave them an answer whether or not the Company would accept the loan; I had seen both Lyon and Goodall on that day before I entered into the consideration; I conversed with them about this loan; the whole consideration did not occupy my time half an hour; they were a portion of the time in a side room; Ham and I considered the loan in the main office; Lyon and Goodall were in a side room; I am not sure whether I or Ham communicated the information to Lyon or Goodall; I am unable to say whether it was through Ham to Lyon, or whether I made it to Lyon direct; but I afterward had an understanding with Lyon in regard to the matter; I said to Lyon that I would accept the loan, and give a note and the mortgage bonds of the Company as collateral; I did not personally give the bonds or note to any one; I saw the note which was delivered; I think the paper now shown me and marked Exhibit A, is a copy of the note; I was present at the making of the note; I am unable to say who signed the original note; it was signed by Mr. Cisco or myself; it was the usual form of notes given by us for loans; those forms are in part printed; the original was part printed like the one shown; I have been in the dry goods business in the City of New-York; I became Assistant Treasurer of the Union Pacific Railroad Company in 1864; the note given by this Company for the loan; it was a note with collaterals; I know what a negotiable promissory note is; I should think that the note given for the payment of this loan was not negotiable, certainly not unless accompanied by collaterals; I am not prepared to say whether the note in question was or was not negotiable; I don't know whether a note prepared in the way that the one was, with collaterals, could come under the head of negotiables; a note payable to the order of a person indorsed is negotiable; the securities pass with the note; the indorsement on the note would carry the note and the collaterals with it; the negotiation of the note would not be perfect unless the collaterals went with it; there is nothing in the note which says that the collaterals should be sold to any length of time particularly; I have negotiated promissory notes of this kind before; we generally negotiate loans with the persons who wish to loan the money; I have never known the notes of the Company passing from hand to hand; our loans are generally made with persons with whom we are acquainted; I gave my consent to the Company accepting the loan; Mr. Wilkinson nor Mr. Wolff were not there at the time of the loan being made; never spoke to Wilkinson; I have spoken to Wolff; I think Mr. Goodall brought Wolff to the office; it is my impression that he did; I think I saw Wolff in our office; I think I saw him there on Dec. 19; if I saw him there at all it was with Goodall; I am not clear about it; I think Goodall introduced it was Mr. Wolff who had the money to loan; the notes of the Company are numbered and were used for loans; the notes generally stated the numbers of the bonds used as collateral; the notes and bonds are sold in the market, and a large portion of them are in the market; we had other First Mortgage Bonds out as collaterals, to a large amount; these bonds are salable either with or without a note; Mr. Cisco was not in the office when the loan was obtained; the note was not signed in blank; I frequently send notes to Cisco to sign at the Railroad Company was injured by this loan of $100,000; the injury arose when the collateral bonds were sold; I know they were sold three days after the issuing of the note; the injury was a subsequence up to the loan; the injury was in two ways, it prevented our selling bonds at the time by breaking down the price of the bonds, and likewise the difference between the current price and the amount received for them; I was not present at the sale of the bonds; know nothing of the sale; I knew Henry M. Lindell; I believe I saw the possession of Mr. Lindell; the bonds were made up and got into shape; I did not see them on that day or anyone else's hands after they were delivered to Lindell; I have seen some of the bonds since, I think on Dec. 22, in Mr. Ham's hands, in our office; I cannot say that I saw Mr. Ham buy the bonds; I know of the delivery; Henry P. Hammond was the Secretary of the Company, and is now; it was in a great measure on the strength of what Mr. Fitchell said with reference to Lyon which caused me to make the loan; it was mainly owing to this reference of Bushnell that I did so; I was specially authorized by Mr. Ham whether this loan was to be made or not; I would not have taken this loan but for Bushnell vouching for the respectability of Lyon; then I relied upon Lyon's statement to me; I know a broker named Scott offered the bonds and sold them; I was not present at the sale; the inquiry was that they sold the bonds at 93 while we were selling at 102; I complain that they sold bonds which were in trust; we had an agreement with them that they should not dispose of them; I first became acquainted with Goodall two or three months ago; I paid Goodall $500 for procuring this loan; Mr. Goodall came to the office and wanted to know if the Company wished to borrow money, and I told him I was in motion; entries are made in the books of the Company at the time of the loan; when I made the loan, we knew the bonds were in the custody of the person entitled to them.

Frederick A. Goodall recalled and cross-examined: I never introduced Mr. Wolff to Mr. Tuttle at any time or place; I am personally acquainted with the firm of F. J. Thomas & Son; I never had any conversation with him in any way with reference to this transaction; I never had any of these bonds in my possession; the statement of Mr. Ham that I sold those bonds is untrue; I never saw Mr. Lyon have them; the meeting between Wilkinson and myself on Dec. 17 was accidental; that affidavit was drawn by Mr. Adams at Police Headquarters; no other statement was reduced to writing except the one made and shown here; if the words "plan, or scheme, or conspiracy" was used I don't remember; I authorized it to be used; I was in a state of excitement at the time I made the statements contained in the affidavit; I was very nervous; I was anxious to get to my family; the reason I stated about Waterhouse, Pearl & Co., and F. J. Thomas, was because it was hearsay; Mr. Adams did not say it was improper to implicate persons on hearsay; Mr. Adams said in substance that the Company cared more for a settlement than to prosecute the matter; he said the Company would like a settlement, and that was all they wanted; I gave him the affidavit after I was sworn; in the Court-room on the first day of this examination, he wanted me to say that I was not in duress at the time I made the affidavit; he privately requested me to do so; Mr. Adams merely wrote over my remarks; he helped me along a little in some of my statements; he did not undertake to explain to me what fraud was; he did not explain to me what conspiracy was; he told me he was the attorney of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; Capt. Young did not state to me to whom he would apply to protect me; he said he would use his influence to protect me; that I should be released; he pledged his word and honor that I should have immunity; he said that he had such influence with the gubigities; his language was to the effect that his word was good; I never entered into any agreement with Wolff with reference to any money; I we agreed to divide up the commissions with Mr. Lyon and Mr. Wilkinson; the amount was $600; we were to divide a certain amount over $30; I know of no loan made upon those bonds personally; I never was at the office of Waterhouse, Pearl & Co. with Mr. Lyon; I never was with him at P. J. Thomas & Son's office; I don't know, of my own knowledge, that my statements as to them are true; I knew of the railroad company being in the market for a loan from the brokers; I knew Mr. Albert Aub, of No. 35 Exchange-place; I proceeded to the office of the Company in consequence of what he told me, about two or three weeks previous to this loan.

The case was then adjourned until Monday morning at 9 o'clock. Counsel for the defence demanded that the bail for his clients be fixed, and the Magistrate did so by announcing that he would take $10,000 for each of the accused. GOODALL's bail as a witness was placed at $5,000. In default of this bail the accused and witness were remanded to the Tombs and House of Detention.

Funeral of the Late Richard G. Pardee.

The funeral of this benevolent and widely-lamented Christian gentleman took place yesterday morning at 11 o'clock. The remains of the deceased were taken to the Broadway Tabernacle, on the corner of Sixth-avenue and Thirty-fourth-street, where the funeral services were performed. An impressive and solemn anthem was first sung by the choir, followed by a prayer from Rev. Dr. THOMPSON, pastor of the church, who then read portions of Scripture. An address was then delivered by Rev. Dr. FRENCH, of East Brooklyn, in which he alluded to the many virtues and estimble qualities of the deceased, which he said he was well qualified to appreciate, as he had grown up, as it were, under the eye of Mr. PARDEE. He spoke of the untiring devotion of Mr. PARDEE to the Sunday School work, and the good results which he had accomplished.

Rev. Dr. DURYEA then made a short address, in the course of which he adverted to the benevolent labors of the deceased, and his amiable characteristics. A fervent prayer was offered up by Rev. Mr. THOMPSON, and the services closed with a hymn, after which the remains were conveyed to their last resting place in Green-Wood. Among the pall-bearers were Messrs. SCHOFIELD, ATWOOD and E. C. WILDER, of Chicago.

The late Mr. RICHARD G. PARDEE, fifteen or twenty years ago, removed to this City from Western New-York, where he had been engaged in business as a merchant, and became the general agent of the New-York Sunday School Union. In that capacity he visited all parts of the United States. The object of his mission was to induce the church members of the various denominations to use their influence and exert their benevolence to bring into the Sunday Schools the children of the poorer classes who were without education, and by religious instruction and example to lead them to a Christian course of life. By his own personal efforts and those which he awakened among all classes of the Christian community he organized an immensity of good, and doubtless was the means of leading hundreds of the young into the ways of righteousness. He continued General Agent of the Sunday School Union for many years, subsequently became one of its Directors, and President of the Board of Managers. During this period; he lectured all over the country on the importance of religious instruction to the young, and is said to have been exceedingly eloquent. The deceased was an excellent horticulturist, both practical and theoretical, and as a work entitled "Manual for the Cultivation of the Strawberry, Raspberry, Blackberry, Gooseberry, Currant and Grape," is very highly and deservedly valued by horticulturists in all sections of the country. It would be remarkable, indeed, if a man who thought, and was so actively benevolent in the cause of Christianity, had never written on the subject. Accordingly, we find his name as author, on the title pages of two interesting little volumes entitled, "The Sunday School Worker," and "Sabbath School Index." He was also a correspondent, at one time, if we mistake not, of the Examiner, and his letters to the paper were both interesting and instructive. His loss will be widely deplored.

FIRES YESTERDAY.

Extensive Fire in Mulberry-street—Aggregate Loss $140,000.

At 6:30 o'clock yesterday morning a fire broke out on the top floor of the third-story building No. 16 Mulberry-street, occupied and owned by JOHN STEINMETZ as a picture-frame and moulding manufactory. Owing to the inflammable nature of the contents the flames spread with great fury and rapidity, causing the entire destruction of the building as well as that of the adjoining one, No. 18, and also extended to other buildings, with considerable damage thereto.

The loss incurred by Mr. STEINMETZ on building, stock and machinery is estimated at $50,000; insured for $6,000.

No. 18 is occupied by B. W. MERHAM & CO., as the New-York Frame Manufacturing Company, and is a six-story building in front, with an additional story in the rear. The entire edifice was destroyed, the occupants sustaining a loss of $50,000 on stock and machinery, understood to be insured. The building is owned by WM. PHELPS, and his loss is fully $30,000; insured for $10,000.

No. 14 is a three-story tenement-house occupied by eight poor families, and the aggregate loss of owner and tenants is estimated at $8,000. There were several others of the buildings adjacent to the fire that were more or less damaged by the flames.

OTHER FIRES.

Another fire occurred at 11:30 o'clock in a one-story frame building in Forty-fourth-street, between Second and Third avenues, owned by JAMES MORAN, and occuped by PETER BOYLE, when the flames extended to the frame buildings adjoining, all owned by JAMES MORAN, and occupied by himself and TERENCE REILLY. The total loss sustained was about $1,500; no insurance.

At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon a fire occurred and was discovered under the stairs leading to the fourth story of No. 462 Pearl-street. The premises extend through to No. 129 Chatham-street, and are occupied by JAMES FRIGAN, dealer in furniture. Loss $500 on stock. Damage to building, $900. The flames are believed to be of incendiary origin.

At 6:20 o'clock a fire broke out on the third floor of the tenement-house No. 103 Delancey-street, caused by the upsetting of a can of kerosene oil. The third floor rear room is occupied by WM. VOSS, and sustained a loss of $300; insured for $500 in the Germania. The building is a five-story brick one, and owned by ANDREW WEBER, and was damaged to the extent of $100; insured for $8,000 in the Baltic and Commonwealth.

At 4:21 o'clock another fire occurred at No. 104 Charles-street, in a stable owned by THOMAS HARTEMAN, caused by the defect in the flue of an adjoining factory. No damage was occasioned.

At 7:45 o'clock a fire occurred at No. 172 Centre-street, a five-story brick building, owned by Mr. HEXBER, when a damage of $1,500 was occasioned to the edifice; covered by insurance. The building is occupied by the American Veneer Company, and their loss is $500 in stock. The other portion of the first floor is occupied by GEO. LEMMERHARD, cutler, who loses $300 on stock and machinery by the water; insured for $600. The other part of the building is occupied by KAVANAGH & SHERIDAN, millinery manufacturers. Their stock was damaged to the extent of $12,000. Insured. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Contested Assembly Elections.

The Committee of Investigation met yesterday at the Metropolitan Hotel, and had several contested election cases before them.

In the case of WILLETT N. HAWKINS, contestant from the Richmond County District, against JOHN DECKER, incumbent, four witnesses were examined, but nothing of importance elicited, and the further hearing was adjourned over to Monday. There are thirty-two witnesses yet to be examined in behalf of HAWKINS, and eighteen for DECKER, whose testimony will relate chiefly to the charge of the contestant, that a large number of illegal votes were cast through the carelessness of the Poll Clerk, and to the identification of the parties so voting.

In the case of JAMES MCKIEVER, contestant from the Fourteenth Assembly District, against CHARLES H. WHALEN, incumbent, some witnesses were examined. Each of the parties was represented by counsel. Hon. HENRY SMITH, formerly District-Attorney for Albany County, appeared for Mr. MCKIEVER, and JAMES MCGOWEN, EUGENE DERNING and A. H. WAGNER for WHALEN. The claim of the contestant is based on alleged irregularities and frauds in the Eleventh, Fourteenth and Thirty-fourth Election Districts of the Seventeenth Ward.

One witness proved that he examined the registry for the name of EMIL BOEHM, whose name did not appear on any list at the polls. That THOMAS HATTON, one of the Inspectors, said it was on a list which he had at home. HATTON went home, and returned with the list, on which the name appeared, the christian name in ink and his surname in pencil.

A witness named MCCABE testified that he carefully examined his tickets before attempting to vote, and knew that he had but seven, among which was the Assembly ticket for MCKIEVER. The conductor gave him the tickets to Inspector MCKINNA, who told him he had two Assembly tickets, and handed him back one. The witness said he "tuck it, an wint out a kine e confused like, and whin he got outside bedad he foun' he had MCKIEVER wid him." A witness named LARTAN swore he saw a man putting tickets in between the boxes for the Inspectors to use if they fell short, and he caught him by the arm and protested against such proceedings, when Inspector BERNARD MCQUADE told him he talked too much, and if he didn't shut up he would punch his head. DANIEL MCQUADE swore he saw a man offer his tickets to vote, and one of his tickets was dropped on the floor. The Inspector laid a ticket on each of six boxes and put his hand over the Assembly box pretending to drop a ticket in but did not, and then announced that the whole had been voted.

At the 4 o'clock meeting several other witnesses were called, who testified substantially to the same facts, and the hearing was adjourned over until MONDAY next.

The Zimmer-Campbell case, after some unimportant testimony, was adjourned to Wednesday next.

The Kerrigan Contempt Case—The Recorder of Hoboken in Trouble.

Recorder POPE, of Hoboken, who is known as one of the most efficient of New-Jersey Police Justices, became involved in a difficulty, not long since, with Mr. PETER KERRIGAN, a wealthy citizen of Hoboken, whom he had fined for violating the city ordinance in not removing snow and ice from the sidewalk in front of his premises. Mr. KERRIGAN, when brought before His Honor, used not a little disrespectful language, for which he was threatened with commitment. Recorder POPE released him, however, to give him an opportunity to "purge himself of contempt" by apologizing, but notified him to appear to show cause why he should not be committed. When the day for his appearance arrived, he showed no disposition to retract, and he was therefore committed to the County Jail for a period of fifteen days. He was at once released on a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted by Judge BEDLE. Yesterday morning KERRIGAN was brought before Judge BEDLE, at Hudson City, when his counsel, Messrs. W. T. HOPPER and I. SMITH, presented his side of the case in a forcible argument. Mr. J. R. BOYD, counsel for Recorder POPE, also made a lengthy and able plea. His Honor then took the papers and reserved his decision.

Non-Arrival of the Hibernia's Passengers.

The Bremen bark America, which arrived here on Friday, supposed to have on board several of the survivors of the ill-fated steamship Hibernia, was unable to reach the City in consequence of the violent gale, and it was found impossible to board her to ascertain if this were the case. As the weather moderated, however, a steam tug was sent down to the Highlands yesterday morning to tow her to this City, this reached Quarantine between 2 and 3 o'clock the same afternoon, from whence a telegram has been received which will cause great disappointment to those who had friends on board the lost vessel. By the telegram it appears on Christmas day, in lat. 42, lon. 30, the America fell in with the bark Outhbert from Quebec, for Liverpool, in a water-logged condition. The America took off the crew of the disabled vessel, and also the crew and several passengers of the Hibernia who had been picked up by the Outhbert on the 29th of November. Instead of bringing the rescued parties to the end of the voyage, the America landed them at the Azore Islands on the 2d of January.

Blind Residents' Benevolent Association —Meeting of Ladies.

The Blind Residents' Benevolent Association of this City propose holding a fair and festival in aid of the blind residents of this City and county, in the Everett Rooms, No. 1,596 Broadway, commencing on the 23d inst.

This Association was organized Dec. 30, 1868,

The Rogers Murder.

Yesterday was as prolific as usual of rumors concerning the Rogers murder investigation, none of which, being traced to their source, proved to be worthy of credence. Sergt. LOWERY continued actively at work on the case, and at an early hour of the morning took four witnesses, said to be important, to the Station-house in Mercer-street, where they were examined at great length and their statements taken in writing by an experienced clerk sent from Police Headquarters by Superintendent KENNEDY for the purpose. No hint was given as to the nature of these statements except a general remark that the case against the man JOHN ROBINSON becomes stronger every day. The Police have not abated any of their recent reticence, and while the officers themselves refuse to give any details of their case, they are happy in the belief that their remaining witnesses will not imitate the example of DELANOY, and parade themselves before the public in advance of permission being given them by the Police. They are thus confident that they can work up the case at their leisure, without danger of being thwarted by premature publicity.

As was announced in the TIMES of yesterday the case of ROBINSON is expected to culminate to-morrow, and the evidence be ready to be submitted to the Grand Jury. The case now appears to be exclusively in the hands of Sergt. LOWERY, and that officer is certainly entitled to the credit of most persevering industry and an undoubted faith that his present efforts will result in the conviction of the murderer of CHAS. M. ROGERS.

The Tables Turned by a Charge of Perjury.

DANIEL NEWMAN, of No. 316 Tenth-avenue, some days since made a complaint before Justice DODGE, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, charging SAMUEL BEVINGTON, of No. 78 Varick-street. It appears from this document, that on the 18th of December last BEVINGTON appeared before Justice LEDWITH and made a sworn statement that NEWMAN had stolen from him a diamond pin worth $40, an overcoat worth $24, and a shooting jacket valued at $18. Upon this complaint a warrant was issued, and NEWMAN being arrested was held for trial on the charge of grand larceny. After a confinement of one week in the Second District Prison, NEWMAN was indicted by the Grand Jury, but afterwards the case was dismissed by Judge BEDFORD, of the General Sessions, upon motion of the District-Attorney. NEWMAN charged that in making the affidavit upon which he was arrested BEVINGTON committed wilful and corrupt perjury, and sets forth that BEVINGTON owed him $670, for which he had begun a civil suit, and that thereupon BEVINGTON had threatened that he would fix him (NEWMAN). Upon this complaint a warrant was issued, and BEVINGTON, being arrested by Sergt. BURDEN, found himself in his turn an inmate of the Second District Prison, where he was yesterday committed by Justice DODGE in default of $2,500 bail.

Assessor Webster and the Brokers.

The issue between Assessor WEBSTER and the brokers is still the subject of much discussion. The latter claim that the borrowed capital with which their transactions are conducted is not properly subject to a tax, while Mr. WEBSTER insists that the law requires that it shall be paid. It is asserted that the brokers have evaded another law, and that it will be enforced against them. The act of May 13, 1866, provides that on all sales made by brokers, banks, or bankers, whether made for others or for their own account, there shall be paid a tax of one cent for every $100 of the amount of such sales; and that the seller shall give the buyer a bill of sale or memorandum of the contract between them, with a stamp thereon equivalent to the amount of tax. Before this law was passed the amount yielded by a special tax on such sales reached several millions a year; but the whole income from the sale of stamps throughout the country since the new act took effect, is only about $1,000,000 a year. It is inferred from this fact that the brokers forget to use stamps on their bills of sales. This law, the brokers declare, is always fully complied with.

Alleged Forgery.

GEORGE A. BACHE, of No. 761 Greenwich-street, was arrested yesterday by Officer ANDRE, upon a complaint made by WM. H. VAN WYCK, of No. 268 West Thirty-eighth-street, in which he is charged with forgery. The document, which was executed some days since before Justice DODGE at the Jefferson Market Police Court, alleges that on the 26th day of August, 1867, BACHE, in the presence of complainant, executed a certain note for $2,000 on the Chatham National Bank, to which he signed the name of JACOB SOUTHART, and that the signing of that name was a forgery upon the part of BACHE. It further appeared that SOUTHART is a person of unsound mind, and his affairs are in the hands of trustees. BACHE claims that he had authority to make the check in question, and that his right to do so has been the subject of a civil suit. The case was continued for examination.

Burglary in Tenth-avenue.

During the night of the 6th of December the shop of JOHN MORRIS, No. 330 Tenth-avenue, was entered by burglars, who forced open the rear door, and managed to get away unobserved with thirty-five dozen horse shoes, worth $200, and a box of nails worth $8. No trace of the burglars or property was discovered until yesterday, when MORRIS found, in the shop of one PETER MCDONALD, in Tenth-avenue, near Thirty-first-street, a lot of horse shoes, which he identified as his stolen property by a private mark which he had placed upon them. He therefore caused MCDONALD to be arrested by Detective MCCAFFERTY, of the Sixteenth Precinct, and the prisoner, being arraigned before Justice DODGE, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, was committed for trial at the General Sessions. MCDONALD admitted his guilt, and said the shoes had been left with him by a boy.

Threatening to Stab.

On Friday night PETER F. BURKE alias Rioter Burke, and JOHN SHARKEY, entered the saloon of THOMAS GIBNEY, No. 245 Ninth-avenue, and called for refreshments, which were served to them. After they had eaten payment was demanded, but they flatly refused to settle. GIBNEY, being importunate on the subject, the two men proceeded to "get square with him" by breaking down his door, pulling him by the nose, and BURKE justified his alias by flourishing a huge knife in dangerous proximity to the person of GIBNEY and threatening to "cut him up." If he entertained any such intention, it was frustrated by the arrival of Officer WOOLFE, of the Sixteenth Precinct, who took the two rowdies into custody. Being arraigned before Justice DODGE, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, the two prisoners encountered the prevalent magisterial severity, and were committed without bail for trial at the General Sessions.

The Sailors' Interests.

A well-known shipping firm of this City indorses the following proposition for the relief of sailors who go from this port:

I have followed the sea for over forty years, and have passed through all the vicissitudes of a laborious life. It would be useless for me to enumerate the sailor's worth, for every man, woman and child must know it but too little appreciate it, or more interest would be taken in the sailor's welfare. What can we do for the poor sailor? I will tell you. Let us establish practical seamen's homes, fitted up on the plan of a first-class boarding-house, sufficiently large to accommodate the sailors on the East River and North River sides. To do this, let there be a joint-stock company formed of a sufficient capital to buy the land, put up the buildings, elect a President and other officers; place the buildings under charge of humane old sea captains, with regulations the same as on board of a first-class steamer or packet ship. These sailors' homes should be provided with libraries, reading-rooms, gymnasiums, first-class bars, with none but the best of wines and liquors, bath-rooms, boot blacks and good servants, with a skilful medical man and a dispensary, and good nurses to attend on the sick. While these buildings are being erected, get all the seamen that sail out of this port to register and enroll their names, and have a certificate that they are members of this Home, in order that as soon as they arrive in this port a proper officer shall take charge of them and their baggage, and then conduct them in a decent manner to their hotel. A uniform rate of charges for board, lodging and washing should be fixed by the directors of said company in accordance with the wages the sailor receives. The rate of wages should be fixed by a committee every month in proportion to the rates of freight reserved by vessels. In each of these homes there should be an officer for the shipment of seamen, with a clerk to make up the crew lists, the expenses of which should be paid by the company. Proper by-laws should be formed, so as to prevent improper persons from having access to these buildings, and a police maintained to insure the safety and good order of the institutions. The whole profits, after paying the owners per cent. interest on the capital stock, should go into a sinking fund to pay off the principal. When this is done the profits over the interest on money should be turned into a charitable fund for the seaman's widows and orphans and disabled seamen. These should be also attached to the institutions a seamen's savings bank, allowing each depositor five per cent. interest on his deposits,

Lecture by Prof. Ebell.

Prof. A. J. EBELL delivered his last lecture at Cooper Institute, yesterday evening. His subject was "ZOOLOGY," or that part of it relating to the Articulates, of which there are three classes—the worms or entozoa, the crustacea, including crabs, lobsters, &c., and the insectiana. He described the individual species of these classes and illustrated them with a stereoscope on canvas.

The audience, which filled about one-half the hall, were evidently interested in the speaker's remarks. It was announced at the commencement of the lecture that a course of five lectures on Political and Social Science would begin on next Saturday evening at Irving Union, the first of which will be delivered by Prof. BOWEN, of Harvard College. Subject—"The National Debt."

Another Champion Skating Match.

The rival skatists of FRANK SWIFT, the present champion of America, are not disposed to allow him to wear his honors easily. He has but just conquered MEADE, and now he is called upon to meet the ex-champion, E. T. GOODRICH, one of the leading experts of the country, whose performances at the Olympic last year were so much admired. This second championship contest is announced to take place at the Brooklyn Skating Rink, on Clermont-avenue, on Tuesday night at 8:30 o'clock, on which occasion there will, no doubt, be a large gathering of fancy skaters present, as great interest is taken in the meeting. Nearly a foot thickness of ice has been obtained during the recent cold spell, and this will insure a fine field for the occasion, no matter what change of weather may intervene.

Hotel Waiters' Protective Association Ball.

The annual ball of the Waiters' Protective Association took place on Friday night at Irving Hall. All that was dainty in lady's maid-dom was there, with the prettiest chambermaids from the leading hotels. The Association has lasted six years. Its funds are devoted to aid any of its eight hundred members in sickness, but as an average of only fourteen suffer a temporary disablement from work during the year, no heavy expenses are incurred. Waiting seems to agree with the human constitution. The Association is devoted, also, to maintaining a fair rate of wages. Without the necessity of striking, the members have gradually, since the formation of their society, raised hotel wages from $12 a month to $30. In addition to this sum they receive board, but find lodgings for themselves.

The Strikes.

Nothing new transpired yesterday. The printers had a meeting, but did nothing important. The sailors' strike is really terminated, but out of the strike has grown a Sailors' Association, which seems likely to be beneficial.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

New-York.

Rev. ROBERT R. BOOTH, D. D., of the Mercer-street Presbyterian Church, will lecture on Monday evening, Feb. 8, at 8 o'clock, at the Brick Church Mission Chapel, No. 228 West Thirty-fifth-street. Subject—"A week in St. Petersburg."

Mr. JOHN WILDEY opened his new building and sample-rooms, entitled the Mutual Club-house, at Nos. 622 and 624 Broadway, last night, with a social entertainment to his patrons. His rooms have been tastefully fitted up, and are now open to the public. During the evening a clam chowder was served up by Prof. KATEN, under the auspices of the Mutual Pleasure Club, and was disposed of with great gusto. Mr. PHELAN and Mr. DEERY were present and played a game of billiards, to the gratification of the company. Mr. DEERY came off victor, after which he displayed his skill in several fancy shots, which were loudly applauded.

To-morrow evening Prof. A. HOFFSTETTOR will lecture at the Willett-street Methodist Episcopal Church, on "Stepping Stones to Civilization," for the benefit of the Sunday School.

CATHARINE LEARARD, of No. 108 Chatham-street, was arraigned before Justice DOWLING yesterday on a charge of robbing THOMAS CUMMINGS, of No. 17 Vandewater-street, whom she had induced to go home with her. He lost a $300 gold watch while asleep on a saloon floor, and Officer MCMANUS, of No. 89 Centre-street, saw the prisoner at Chatham-street with the missing watch, which he took from her, the Magistrate held her for trial.

On Friday evening SIMON LONCKE, clerk for the Delaware and Lackawanna Coal Company at the yard on the corner of Avenue B and Thirteenth-street, was assaulted by three men as he was leaving the general office of the Company in East Thirty-fourth-street with the day's receipts, $138. Two of the men held him while the other took from his person the above amount and decamped with their plunder.

MICHAEL GANNAN, a barkeeper, was arraigned before Justice DOWLING yesterday on a charge of committing a burglary in the house of JOHN RYAN, No. 1 Monroe-street, on the 26th ult., and stealing a $30 shawl. As the evidence was conclusive the prisoner was held for trial.

The Coroners were notified yesterday of the sudden death of AUGUST AELERS, aged 8 months, at No. 239 East Twenty-eighth-street, and that of Mrs. MARY ELDRIDGE, aged 40, who died at No. 397 East Eleventh-street. Inquests will be held to-day.

An inquest will be held to-day by Coroner SCHIRMER at Bellevue Hospital over the remains of CHRISTOPHER NELSON, whose death was the result of injuries
